Republicans Poised to Capture Senate, Retain House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans were poised to seize control of the Senate, capturing seats from Democrats in elections Tuesday shaped by deep voter discontent with President Barack Obama.

Within hours of the first polls closing, Republicans had won five of the six seats needed to take over the Senate majority: Colorado, South Dakota, Arkansas, West Virginia and Montana. They had solid prospects to capture more Democratic seats.

APNewsBreak: Russia plans nuclear summit boycott

GEORGE JAHN
DEB RIECHMANN
Associated Press

VIENNA (AP) — Russia has informed the United States that it will boycott the 2016 Nuclear Security Summit, diplomats told The Associated Press on Tuesday, potentially stripping the meeting of one of its key participants and hurting efforts initiated by President Barack Obama to reduce the threat of nuclear terror-

cy. Russia has participated in such summits in the past. But the diplomat, who is familiar with Moscow's stance, said it already had reservations while attending the last meeting in March at The Hague. He did not specify but added that the "changed political atmosphere" — shorthand for Russia-U.S. tensions over Ukraine — added to the Kremlin's decision to stay

But Russian reluctance to go along with the U.S.-backed initiative already was apparent. Moscow refused to back such a 35-nation agreement, as did China, India and Pakistan. All four of those nations have nuclear weapons. The summits were initiated by Obama in 2010 and are aimed at preventing terrorists from getting their hands on weapons-grade nuclear material. Since the first sum-

ism. Officials already had told the AP on Monday that Moscow was absent from last week's initial summit planning session in Washington but had left it unclear whether Russia planned to attend the summit itself. On Tuesday, two diplomats said the boycott applied to the 2016 meeting as well. They cited as their source a diplomatic note from Moscow to the U.S. and other nations planning to participate. The diplomats spoke on condition of anonymity because they are not allowed to discuss confidential information. One of the diplomats said the note expressed opposition to the summit because of its alleged political nature. He cited the note as saying that any meeting on nuclear security should be on a technical level and convened not by a nation but by the U.N.'s International Atomic Energy Agen-away. In Moscow, Russian Foreign Ministry officials did not immediately respond to a request for comment. Gary Samore, who advised Obama on nonproliferation until last year, said the Russian decision showed that "nuclear security has become a victim of geopolitics." But Samore, who is now with Harvard's Belfer Center said Russia might change its mind by 2016, assuming that "a political settlement in Ukraine can be achieved." At the last summit, 35 countries discussed turning international guidelines on nuclear security into national laws and opening their procedures for protecting nuclear installations to independent scrutiny. The summit also featured new reduction commitments, with Japan, Italy and Belgium agreeing to cut their stocks of highly enriched uranium and plutonium.

mit, the number of countries that have enough material to build a nuclear weapon has fallen from 39 to 25. Outlining his vision in a keynote speech five years ago, Obama announced a new effort to secure sensitive nuclear material within four years and to cripple black-market trade. Russia's presence is important both as a world power and a nation with one of the world's largest nuclear stockpiles. Its absence would clearly encourage other nations skeptical of the U.S. initiative to resist more international oversight of their nuclear facilities, while emboldening other nations contemplating staying away. Such a move also would be the latest sign of strains in U.S.-Russian relations, caused by Washington's criticism of Russian-backed separatists fighting in Ukraine and the imposition of U.S. economic sanctions against Russia. □

AP: Detainee brought from Afghanistan to U.S. for trial

LARRY O'DELL
Associated Press

RICHMOND, Virginia (AP) — A Russian member of the Taliban made his first appearance in a federal court on Tuesday, marking the first time a military detainee from Afghanistan has been brought to the U.S. for trial. Irek Hamidullin's appearance before U.S. Magistrate Judge David Novak in Virginia represents the Obama administration's latest attempt to show that it can use the criminal court system to deal with terror suspects. His arraignment on 12 terrorism charges has been set for Friday morning before U.S. District Judge Henry Hudson, a former federal prosecutor.

U.S. officials say Hamidullin is a Russian veteran of the Soviet war in Afghanistan who stayed in the country and joined the Taliban. He was captured in 2009 after an attack on Afghan border police and U.S. soldiers in Khost province. He had been held at the U.S. Parwan detention facility at Bagram airfield before being brought to the U.S.

National Security Council spokeswoman Bernadette Meehan has said the decision to transfer him was made in light of the agreement by the U.S. that it will turn over all prisons in Afghanistan to the Afghan government by 2015. As of last month, there were 13 non-Afghan detainees at Parwan. The Obama administration is facing pressure to transfer those detainees before December, when the U.S.-led NATO combat mission ends.

Many Republican lawmakers believe military detainees should only be tried in military courts, and that trying them in civilian courts undermines the notion that the U.S. is at war with al-Qaida and other extremists.

But the Obama administration has sought to try terror suspects in federal court wherever possible. Attorney General Eric Holder has said they are likely to receive swifter justice there.

Among the charges Hamidullin faces in an indictment unsealed Tuesday are providing material support to terrorists, conspiracy and attempt to destroy an aircraft of the U.S. Armed Forces and conspiracy to use a weapon of mass destruction. The "mass destruction" charge carries a possible death sentence, but Assistant U.S. Attorney James Gillis said the attorney general is not seeking death because of insufficient aggravating factors.

Several of the counts are punishable by up to life in prison. Hamidullin, shackled and heavily guarded by federal agents, said little during his initial appearance, where Novak advised him of his rights and asked if the defendant understood the charges. Federal public defender Robert Wagner and attorney Claire Cardwell were appointed to represent him.

According to the 19-page indictment, Hamidullin was an officer and tank commander in the Russian military during the 1980s and was trained in the use of such weapons as anti-aircraft machine guns and portable rockets. He became affiliated with the Taliban in 2001.

The indictment says Hamidullin commanded three groups of insurgents that attacked Afghan Border Police at Camp Leyza, one of six locations the Taliban had identified as possible targets. He directed insurgents armed with anti-aircraft machine guns to fire at U.S. military helicopters responding to the attack, the indictment says, and later used a machine gun to shoot at U.S. troops and Afghan Border Police assessing damage at the battle site. Assistant Attorney General John Carlin, head of the Justice Department's National Security Division, said the case is a reminder of the threats faced by U.S. military service members abroad and "highlights our resolve to use all tools to find and hold terrorists accountable wherever they operate in the world." □

Democrats, meanwhile, had few opportunities to unseat Republicans.

Republicans were also on track to increase their majority in the House of Representatives. If they take the Senate too, that would complicate the final two years of Obama's presidency, potentially deepening the partisan gridlock in Washington.

Among the Republicans re-elected Tuesday was the man who would likely become majority leader if the party captures the Senate: Mitch McConnell of Kentucky. Democrats once had high hopes of defeating him, but he pulled away in the final weeks.

Republicans were more fired up in this election, united in opposition to a president they see as pushing the government too deeply into American lives. But dissatisfaction goes beyond the party. Americans tend to be disgruntled these days, seeing the economy as stagnating or growing worse and besieged by troubling news, such as the beheading of Americans by Islamic extremists and worries about Ebola. While exit polls show voters dissatisfied with Republican leaders, it's the president who gets the brunt of the blame.

Opinion polls show Obama's popularity falling and, though he wasn't on the ballot, Republicans made him the focus of their campaigns. "I'm just waiting for him to be gone," said Kristi Johnson, a 36-year-old pharmacist from North Carolina.

It was bound to be a difficult election for Democrats. Governing parties historically lose seats in midterm votes and a number of Democrats were defending seats in states that lean Republican. Some were first elected to six-year terms in 2008, riding the wave of excitement over Obama's initial candidacy.

By contrast, Democratic candidates in this year's most competitive Senate races did whatever they could to distance themselves from the president. Obama largely limited his campaigning to candidates in solidly Democratic territory. In a sign of the grim outlook for Democrats, the party had to scramble in the final days to help incumbents who suddenly found themselves in danger.

Overall, at stake Tuesday were 36 of the 100 Senate seats, all 435 House districts and 36 of 50 governors' seats. The spending was unprecedented for a non-presidential year. Congressional races alone cost an estimated $4 billion.

Democrats held off some Republican challengers. In New Hampshire, incumbent Jeanne Shaheen defeated Scott Brown, a former senator from neighboring Massachusetts.

In Louisiana, a Democratic-held seat is headed for a Dec. 6 runoff after no candidate won a majority. The Democrats best hope for capturing a Republican seat, in Georgia, could also go to a runoff.

But in the high-profile Florida gubernatorial race, Republican Gov. Rick Scott defeated Republican-turned-Democrat Charlie Crist. The vote was closely watched to see how White House contenders might vie for the largest battleground state in 2016.

In another race with implications for presidential politics, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker turned back a strong challenge from Democrat Mary Burke. Walker's victory boosts his prospects as a potential presidential candidate.

In the House, only a few dozen races are truly competitive. The dominant parties in state legislatures tend to carve out congressional districts to maximize the number of seats their parties can win, a process known as gerrymandering. Still, even with the few competitive races, Republicans could end up with more seats than at any time since 1946, if they manage to pick up 13.

If Republicans take over the Senate, Obama would likely have to contend with McConnell as the leading senator in the chamber. McConnell is a conservative with little charisma, but sharp political skills. He's opposed Obama on health care reform and other issues, but also helped broker bipartisan deals that ended last year's government shutdown and averted a 2011 federal default. With both chambers in Republican hands, Obama would seem to have little hope for his top legislative priorities, such as raising the minimum wage or overhauling immigration policies.

But that's not a huge change, since he's had little success with Congress since Republicans captured the House in 2010. Republicans would face challenges of their own. Even if they control the Senate, they won't have the 60-vote supermajority that's needed to pass major legislation. □

Right-to-die efforts galvanized by young woman's death

STEVEN DUBOIS
Associated Press

PORTLAND, Oregon (AP) —

A young woman's last days has sparked a national conversation about whether it's right for a terminally ill person to end his or her own life.

Now that Brittany Maynard has died, it's time to see whether the millions of clicks and views she generated online trigger more than just talk.

Advocates for expanding right-to-die laws beyond a handful of states expect attention from her story to carry into the new year, when state legislatures go into session.

"I think on both coasts we're going to see legislative action," said Peg Sandeen, executive director of the Death with Dignity National Center.

That optimism will be met with the political reality that such legislation has been pushed for years, often unsuccessfully.

"Suicide is never a good solution, regardless of the situation that one is confronting," said Judie Brown, president of the American Life League, a Catholic group.

Oregon was the first U.S. state to make it legal for a doctor to prescribe a life-the spotlight in America for about a month after publicizing that she and her husband, Dan Diaz, moved to Portland from Northern California so she could use Or-ending drug to a terminally ill patient. Through June 30, just over 800 people had used the law since it took effect shortly after the November 1997 election.

Maynard, terminally ill with brain cancer, grabbed egon's law to end her life on her own terms. Maynard told journalists she planned to die Nov. 1 and followed through Saturday. She was 29.

Her suicide didn't go unnoticed overseas. The Vatican's top bioethics official, Monsignor Ignacio Carrasco de Paula, condemned the act, calling it "reprehensible."

Maynard approached the advocacy group Compassion & Choices this summer in hopes that telling her story would lead to political action in California and across the U.S. Whether that happens is an open question.

But Maynard succeeded in raising awareness about an issue that was trending on Facebook and Twitter after her death.

"Younger people support death with dignity at really high levels, but it's not necessarily relevant or salient to their lives," Sandeen said. "I think the Brittany Maynard story makes it real."

Vermont last year became the first state to legalize aid in dying through legislation. Oregon and Washington did so by referendum, and it was effectively legalized through court decisions in Montana and New Mexico. In New Jersey, the state Assembly considered but failed to pass an aid-in-dying bill in June. Democratic Assemblyman John Burzichelli, who authored the bill, said he is hopeful it can pass the state's lower chamber before the end of the year. If that happens, he expects the Senate to pass it soon after.

Republican Gov. Chris Christie has said he opposes the measure.

Compassion & Choice is spending about $7 million a year to protect the practice in states where it has been authorized and passing legislation in states where it has not, said Mickey MacIntyre, the group's chief program officer.

The group said its website has had more than 5 million unique visitors over the past month, while Maynard's two videos have been viewed more than 13 million times on YouTube alone.

Not everyone who viewed the videos is a fan. Social conservatives have sharply criticized Maynard's decision, and it's unlikely any Republican-controlled legislatures will consider right-to-die laws.

Maynard's relatives asked for privacy Monday and have not released information about funeral arrangements. A spokesman for Compassion & Choices said she died peacefully, surrounded by family and friends in her Portland home. □

Judge orders Kansas to let gay couples marry

KANSAS CITY, Kansas (AP) —

A federal judge on Tuesday ordered Kansas to allow same-sex couples to marry pending the outcome of a lawsuit challenging the state's ban, but he delayed enforcement of his order until next week to give the state time to appeal.

U.S. District Judge Daniel Crabtree issued a preliminary injunction barring the state from enforcing its same-sex marriage ban as of 5 p.m. next Tuesday, pending the outcome of an American Civil Liberties Union lawsuit challenging it.

Attorney General Derek Schmidt, whose office has been defending the state's constitutional ban, said he would quickly appeal. Gov. Sam Brownback's spokeswoman, Eileen Hawley, said the governor took an oath to defend the Kansas Constitution and would work with Schmidt "to ensure an orderly judicial process in determining this issue and to avoid the confusion created by inconsistent judicial rulings."

The American Civil Liberties Union sued on behalf of two lesbian couples who were denied marriage licenses after an unexpected decision by the U.S. Supreme Court last month. □

The former fugitive charged with ambushing a Pennsylvania state police barracks had a laptop computer and used the Internet while evading hundreds of law enforcement officials, according to court documents released Tuesday.

State police found the laptop and two storage drives inside an abandoned airplane hangar near the spot where Eric Frein was captured Thursday night, according to a search warrant inventory. Frein told authorities he used unprotected Wi-Fi hotspots to connect to the Internet during his 48-day flight, documents said, raising the possibility he knew where police were focusing their search efforts each day.

It's not clear how he kept the computer charged. Before his capture, state police had surmised he was breaking into cabins and unoccupied vacation homes for food and shelter.

Frein was unarmed when he surrendered to U.S.

marshals in an open field. He told police a rifle and handgun were inside the hangar, according to an affidavit.

The 31-year-old survivalist and expert marksman is charged with opening fire on state police barracks Sept. 12, killing one trooper and seriously wounding a second. Prosecutors are seeking the death penalty. Frein has been assigned two public defenders. They did not return phone messages left by The Associated Press.

A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Nov. 12.

Frein was prepared for falling temperatures, wearing a thermal shirt, sweater and fleece jacket on the day he was caught, along with military pants, according to documents. □

Boston Marathon suspect's sister pleads guilty to charge

DENISE LAVOIE
AP Legal Affairs Writer

BOSTON (AP) — A sister of Boston Marathon bombing suspect Dzhokhar Tsarnaev pleaded guilty Tuesday to misleading a police detective during a counterfeiting investigation, avoiding jail time in an agreement with prosecutors.

Ailina Tsarnaeva, 24, entered the plea in South Boston Municipal Court. If she avoids further legal trouble for 30 days, she will be free of any court supervision. If she does get into trouble, the judge could sentence her up to 2 ½ years in jail.

Prosecutors said Tsarnaeva failed to cooperate with a police officer investigating the passing of a counterfeit bill by a group of people eating at an Applebee's restaurant in the South Bay Center, a mall in Boston's Dorchester neighborhood, on April 16, 2010. A server saw the group leaving and wrote down their license plate number.

Police traced the car to Tsarnaeva at her family's Cambridge home. When questioned, Tsarnaeva said she did not know the names of the people she picked up from the restaurant, according to the police report. She also told police that she had not lied but "did not want to be a snitch," according to the report. In court Tuesday, Tsarnaeva's lawyer, George Gormley, acknowledged that Tsarnaeva had misled police but said her motivation was to protect a female friend, not the person who allegedly passed the counterfeit bill. Gormley said he obtained the name of that person from Tsarnaeva's friend and gave it to prosecutors. Assistant District Attorney William Champlin IV said the disposition was appropriate because of the age of the case and Tsarnaeva's acceptance of responsibility by pleading guilty.

Jake Wark, a spokesman for Suffolk District Attorney Daniel Conley, said prosecutors also considered separate charges pending against Tsarnaeva in New York, where she is accused of threatening to "put a bomb" on a perceived romantic rival.

"The most effective way of handling this and not interfering with her other pending case is to place this conviction on file, which allows the judge to re-sentence her if she re-offends at any time during the next 30 days and also prevents any appellate challenges to the conviction," Wark said. □

America's trade deficit expands through September

JOSH BOAK

AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit rose in September as exports slumped, a sign that the world's biggest economy is starting to feel the impact of weakening global growth.

The Commerce Department said Tuesday that the trade deficit rose 7.6 percent to $43 billion in September. That marks the first increase in four months. A deficit occurs when a country imports more than it exports.

Economic slowdowns in Europe and China appear to have hurt demand for American-made goods. Since September, the dollar has appreciated in value more than 4 percent against the euro to $1.25, making U.S. products less competitively priced abroad. Exports fell 1.5 percent to $195.6 billion, led by declines in shipments of industrial supplies, consumer products and capital goods such as engines and computers.

September imports held steady at $238.6 billion for the second straight month. The trade gap has been tempered this year by the boom in U.S. energy production, which has reduced dependence on foreign oil and increased U.S. petroleum exports. So far this year, petroleum imports are 7.6 percent below the level of a year ago. Part of that decline has come from falling oil prices, with crude imports costing 3.1 percent less so far this year. Petroleum exports will likely fall in the months ahead, as oil prices have slipped below $80 a barrel from more than $100 a barrel in June. "The collapse in crude oil prices means that the trade deficit will narrow again before the end of this year," said Paul Ashworth, chief U.S. economist

A ship to shore crane unloads a shipping container at the Georgia Ports Authority Garden City terminal, in Savannah, Ga. The Commerce Department reported on the U.S. trade deficit for September on Tuesday, Nov. 4, 2014.

at Capital Economics. The politically sensitive trade deficit with China surged 17.6 percent to $35.6 billion in September, an all-time high. The release of the new Apple iPhone likely fueled much of the 12.7 percent increase in imports from China, just as growth in that economy has slipped and caused U.S. exports to fall 3.2 percent.

The deficit with China is on track to set another record for the entire year, creating more pressure for Congress and the Obama administration to take steps to curb what critics call unfair trade practices in China. U.S. manufacturers say that China is manipulating its currency for a trade advantage. They accuse China of undervaluing the yuan to make the goods it manufactures cheaper when they are exported, and American products more expensive in China. U.S. exports to the European Union also fell in September, decreasing 6.5 percent compared to August as several nations on that continent are grappling with the risk of a recession.

Through September, the trade deficit totaled $378.1 billion, compared to $363.9 billion for the same period last year. For all of 2013, the deficit totaled $476.4 billion, 11.4 percent lower than in 2012. Many economists believe the trade deficit will rise slightly in 2014, as a stronger U.S. economy is drawing in more imports.

American factory orders slip on demand in September

JOSH BOAK

AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories declined in September, dragged by falling demand in the volatile aircraft category.

The Commerce Department said Tuesday that orders retreated 0.6 percent in September, after having plunged 10 percent in August, also due largely to plummeting demand for aircraft.

There are usually dramatic monthly swings in demand for aircraft, which before falling in September and August had soared by 315.6 percent in July. Excluding the volatile transportation sector, factory orders have been flat for the past two months.

Orders at aluminum, iron and steel mills rose in September, as did demand for furniture and motor vehicles. But those gains were offset, in part, by declining orders for construction machinery, electronics products and consumer goods. Despite the decrease in orders, other manufacturing indicators point toward strengthening factories.

The Institute for Supply Management, a trade group of purchasing managers, reported Monday that its manufacturing index climbed to 59 in October from 56.6 in September. Any reading above 50 signals expansion. The gains match a three-year high previously reached in August and marks a solid rebound from a September decline.

The survey behind the index showed that orders, productivity and hiring each improved at a faster clip in October than the prior month.

Pace of US home price growth slows for Sept.

JOSH BOAK

AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. housing market cooled off in September, as home prices rose at an ever slowing pace.

Prices increased 5.6 percent in September compared to a year ago, real estate data provider CoreLogic said Tuesday. That's down from annual gains of 6.4 percent in August and 6.8 percent in July.

Home prices had been climbing by as much as 12 percent annually toward the end of last year. But the acceleration out of the housing crash that triggered the Great Recession has become unsustainable. Wages have barely budged after inflation and lending standards remain relatively strict. This makes it difficult for families to pay the higher home prices.

CoreLogic forecasts that the slowdown will continue, with annual home price growth slipping below 5 percent by September 2015. This should help bolster home sales for first-time buyers with adequate incomes and down payment savings, yet there are few signs that younger Americans are buying real estate.

Circus cited for hair-hanging stunt that injured 9

MICHELLE R. SMITH

Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island

(AP) — Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus misused a key rigging component in a hair-hanging stunt, causing a fall that seriously injured eight acrobats from the U.S., Brazil, Bulgaria and Ukraine, federal workplace safety regulators said Tuesday.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration cited the company for a serious safety violation and proposed the maximum fine, $7,000, for the circus' parent company, Feld Entertainment. It concluded circus staff had improperly loaded a carabiner clip.

The company disputed the finding and was deciding whether to contest it, said Stephen Payne, a spokesman for Feld Entertainment. OSHA investigators said the company attached two rings to the bottom of the carabiner, rather than one, in violation of what it said was industry practice and of the manufacturer's instructions. Investigators said that caused the clip to be overloaded.

Payne disputed that, saying the clip was carrying a lower load than it was rated to hold.

David Michaels, assistant secretary of labor for occupational safety and health, called it a "catastrophic failure," and said it demonstrates the circus industry needs professional engineers to develop, evaluate and inspect the structures it uses in performances.

"We can never put a price on the impact this event had on these workers and their families. Employers must take steps to ensure this does not happen again," he said.

Payne said safety of its workers and audience are the company's top priority, and it is making the necessary changes.

The eight acrobats were attached by their hair to a chandelier-like apparatus and suspended in the air. They had just begun their act on May 4 when the carabiner clip snapped, sending them plummeting to the ground 15 feet below. A ninth worker on the ground was hit and was also hurt. Most of the women were severely injured. Some were unable to walk as of June, and they have collectively gone through dozens of surgeries. □

Woman gets 16 years prison for running a fake university

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A San Francisco woman was sentenced to more than 16 years in prison for running what prosecutors said was a sham university that served as a front for an immigration scam.

Susan Xiao-Ping Su, founder and president of the phony Tri-Valley University, was accused of charging foreigners tuition and other payments for visa-related documents that allowed them to live in the U.S. while she purported that they were here legally to study. She made more than $5.6 million and used the money to buy commercial real estate, a Mercedes Benz and multiple homes, including one at a golf club, federal prosecutors said Monday.

U.S. District Court Judge Jon S. Tigar sentenced Su, 44, on Friday after she was convicted in March of visa fraud and other charges. She was also ordered to forfeit $5.6 million and pay more than $900,000 in restitution, prosecutors said.

"Student visas are intended to give people from around the world a chance to come to this country to enrich themselves with the vast learning opportunities available here," Tatum King, acting special agent in charge for Homeland Security Investigations, San Francisco, said in a statement. "But in this case, the defendant was interested in a different kind of enrichment, her own."

The Tri-Valley case is not unique in the San Francisco area. Jerry Wang, the chief executive officer of Herguan University and the University of East-West Medicine, is also facing visa fraud charges in connection with what authorities say is a similar scheme. He has pleaded not guilty and is scheduled to go on trial next month. □

Ukrainian president sends more troops to the east

PETER LEONARD
NATALIYA VASILYEVA

Associated Press

KIEV, Ukraine (AP) —

Ukraine's president said Tuesday that additional troops are being deployed to the east, where fighting continues to rage between government forces and pro-Russian separatist fighters.

Petro Poroshenko said the units would defend cities still under government control against possible incursions. His remarks came after Ukrainian security officials claimed over the weekend that Russia has intensified the transfer of troops and military equipment to separatist rebels. Moscow denies it aids the rebels.

"Several new units have been formed that will enable us to repel possible attacks in the direction of Mariupol and Berdyansk, Kharkiv, and areas north of Luhansk and the Dnipropetrovsk region," Poroshenko said, according to a statement on the presidential website.

Tensions have spiked since the weekend, when rebels held an election that was condemned by the West and Ukraine as illegal and destabilizing.

"In recent days, Russia-supported separatists have publicly stated their intention to expand the territory under their control. We strongly condemn ongoing separatist attacks in Meriupol and Dubalsiva and around the Donetsk Airport," U.S. State Department spokeswoman Jen Psaki told reporters in Washington.

"Any attempt to push further into Ukraine would be another violation of Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity and a gross violation of the Minsk agreements signed by Russia, Ukraine, and the separatists," she added, referring to the much-violated case-fire agreed upon in September.

Ukraine and Western governments say Sunday's poll gravely endangered the cease-fire that envisioned local elections across the whole of the east but under Ukrainian law. Russia, however, quickly lent its support to the vote.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel, underlining her displeasure over what she said was Russia's role in the conflict, said Tuesday there is no reason yet to lift European Union sanctions against Moscow. Merkel said she hopes for a diplomatic solution to Ukraine's crisis but added the vote shows "how difficult it is even to maintain agreements that have been made, if we look at the illegal elections."

On Tuesday morning, the separatist leader in the Donetsk region, Alexander Zakharchenko, 38, was sworn in as head of a self-declared secessionist territory.

He was inaugurated in a heavily guarded theater in the city of Donetsk, the main stronghold of a rebel-controlled territory that separatists call the Donetsk People's Republic. □

Gaza reconstruction has begun

JERUSALEM (AP) — The United Nations says that a program to reconstruct the Gaza Strip after this summer's 50-day war with Israel has begun.

Middle East peace process coordinator Robert Serry said the program started Monday with the sale of construction materials to 700 Gaza residents whose homes were damaged. Palestinian estimates say that as much as $6 billion will be required to repair the damage sustained during the conflict.

It began after Hamas militants responded to Israeli arrests of Hamas activists in the West Bank by firing rockets at southern Israel.

Israel answered with a sustained aerial bombardment and ground invasion meant to stop the rocket fire and destroy a network of tunnels constructed to carry out attacks against it.

Serry says some 60,000 Gaza residences need to be repaired immediately. □

Security tight as Shiites mark holy day in Iraq

BEIRUT (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of Shiite pilgrims flocked Tuesday to an Iraqi holy city for the peak of a 10-day religious ritual amid tight security over fears of sectarian attacks — the first time Ashoura has been observed since Sunni extremists seized much of northern and western Iraq. The militants, who view Shiites as apostates deserving of death, claimed responsibility for two bombing attacks against pilgrims that killed 23 people in Baghdad on Sunday. They have systematically massacred thousands of their opponents, including Sunni rivals, in Iraq and Syria and are battling Lebanese army troops near the country's border with Syria.

Ashoura rituals were so far peaceful in the city of Karbala, 50 miles (80 kilometers) south of Baghdad, as more than 30,000 Iraqi troops were deployed to protect the worshippers. The occasion marks the anniversary of the death in the seventh century of the Prophet Muhammad's grandson, Imam Hussein, in a battle outside Karbala — which sealed Islam's historic Sunni-Shiite split. Shiite festivals in Iraq have often been attacked by Sunni extremists.

turned out in the group's stronghold in southern Beirut amid unprecedented security measures.

The annual mournful Shiite march of men beating and whipping themselves is being carried out with a sense of triumph this year in the country, home to a large Shiite minority.

The group's participation in the Syrian war alongside President Bashar Assad's forces against mainly Sunni rebels trying to topple him is highly divisive in Lebanon. Critics say the decision has dragged Lebanon into the fray, triggering suicide and other attacks against Shiite strongholds in the country.

But many supporters of the group backed Hezbollah's participation in the war, adopting its narrative that the intervention in Syria was necessary to keep Sunni extremists such as the Islamic State group from invading Lebanon and committing massacres as it has done in Syria and Iraq.

Now many say they feel vindicated, with Lebanon's army and Hezbollah fighters battling Sunni militants in the country's north.

"What is happening around us increases our conviction and faith that our choices were right," the Hezbollah leader, Sheik Hassan Nasrallah, told tens of thousands of supporters Tuesday.

Speaking via satellite link through a huge video screen, he said takfiris — a term for Islamic extremists — will be defeated everywhere. "And we will have the honor of having been part of their defeat," he said. Nasrallah dismissed reports that Hezbollah will withdraw from Syria because it was sapping the group's resources as "dreams." Security was unprecedented.

Security forces and Hezbollah agents sealed off entrances to the sprawling Shiite stronghold in southern Beirut known as Dahyeh as of Monday night. Trucks filled with sand and cement were parked at the entrances to lessen the impact of potential bombings and pedestrians were meticulously searched.

In Karbala, men, mostly wearing robes, pounded their chests, slashed their heads and beat their bloodied foreheads with the flat sides of swords and knives.

Mourners waved Iraqi and Shiite religious flags as they ran toward the Imam Hussein holy shrine.

The crowds chanted: "Hussein... Hussein," as army helicopters hovered over the area to provide protection for the pilgrims. □

UN refugee agency moves to wipe out statelessness

GREGORY KATZ
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — The U.N. refugee agency launched an ambitious campaign Tuesday to wipe out statelessness in the next decade with the goal of preventing millions from spending their entire lives without legal documentation.

The goal is to focus attention on people who are not recognized in their countries and do not have birth certificates, identity papers or other documents, and to prevent babies born to refugees from being denied legal papers.

That is happening increasingly with children born to pregnant mothers who are fleeing the warfare in Syria and giving birth in refugee camps in neighboring countries.

U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon said in a message backing the campaign that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that nationality is a basic right of all people.

"Without nationality, stateless people are often deprived of other basic human rights, such as going to school, getting a job, getting married or registering the birth of a child," Ban said. "They are sentenced to a life of marginalization and invisibility."

The high profile campaign, backed in an open letter Tuesday by actress Angelina Jolie and others, should help the estimated 10 million people living in the hellish limbo of statelessness, the U.N. high commissioner for refugees, Antonio Guterres, told The Associated Press.

"We are talking about communities that are hidden, that are discriminated against in these countries that do not appear in the global media except when the situation is very dramatic," he said.

Secretary-General Ban urged people around the world to sign the UNHCR letter to end statelessness.

"The goal is 10 million signatures to help change 10 million lives," he said.

Guterres said statelessness creates pain that is almost impossible for most people to imagine because they have never experienced it.

"If you listen, it is a testimony of despair," he said. "I met people who told me, 'We live like wild animals, no one recognizes us, we have no legal existence, no legal identity, and our children will be in the same situation.'" He cited five major trouble spots, including Myanmar, where more than 1 million Rohingya live without legal status, and the Dominican Republic, where the Supreme Court recently stripped nationality from the descendants of Haitian migrants. There are some 700,000 migrant descendants who are not recognized as citizens in Ivory Coast, many Russian speakers are treated as non-citizens in Latvia, and about 500,000 people from various communities do not have nationality in Thailand, he said. □

Makeshift schools created for Syrian refugee children

ELENA BECATOROS
Associated Press

SURUC, Turkey (AP) — It's only a blue tent at the back of a refugee camp in the Turkish border town of Suruc. But for dozens of children who study in the makeshift school, it's a glimmer of hope.

Inside, brightly colored drawings are pinned to the plastic walls, and wooden desks stand in two neat rows. For some of the Kurdish kids who fled with their families from the besieged Syrian town of Kobani, this is the only school they've known.

"The whole world was collapsing, how could they go to school," said Ghazi Mammo Darwesh, father of 7-year-old Diyala. The shy, brown-eyed girl says she like learning Kurdish writing and drawing pictures of flowers and girls.

Her father is overjoyed that, at last, she is learning something.

"How can I not like it? I can fly for happiness. I hope that my children will study abroad," said Darwesh, who has seven children.

School also provides some psychological support for traumatized youngsters, who have lost their homes and often family members during a ferocious onslaught by Islamic State militants on Kobani that began in mid-September. The lessons are basic — only reading and writing in Kurdish is taught, and only for the ages of 7-10. But children, parents and teachers agree it's better than nothing.

"It's very important for the children to be in school and concentrated on education instead of having flashbacks to the war," said Rukan Sheikh Mohammed, a 19-year-old teacher who is a refugee from Kobani herself. The war, she said, had deeply affected the children. "We teach the students to try to provide some confidence, motivating them and telling them they will go home one day and all will be well."

The school where Mohammed teaches was set up about three weeks ago. □

Ex-mayor, wife detained in case of 43 missing

E. EDUARDO CASTILLO

Associated Press

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The hunt for a fugitive ex-mayor and his wife accused of running their Mexican town as a narco-fiefdom and ordering an attack that killed six people and left

Even as they were hauled off to the Attorney General's organized crime unit to give their statements, the capture did nothing to answer the biggest mystery: Where are the students? Their disappearance, and the failure to make progbeen taken into custody, and the Iguala police chief is also being sought. Some hoped the couple's detention would provide new leads. "This was the missing piece. This arrest will help us find our kids," Felipe de la Cruz, Unidos. Abarca received up to $220,000 every few weeks as bribe money and to pay off his corrupt police force, according to Attorney General Jose Murillo Karam, who gave a detailed account last month of the couple's alleged collusion with organized crime.

The mayor's wife was a major operator in the cartel, an offshoot of the Beltran Leyva gang, Murillo Karam said. Two of her brothers were on former President Felipe Calderon's most-wanted drug trafficker list until they were killed in 2009. A third brother, Salomon Pineda, was believed to run the territory in northern Guerrero state for the cartel.

Guerreros Unidos has increasingly turned to the lucrative practice of growing opium poppies and sending opium paste to be refined for heroin destined for the U.S. market, according to a federal official.

The students attended a radical rural teachers college with a history of carrying out protests. They had gained the enmity of Abarca because of a previous demonstration in the town, Murillo Karam said. Abarca believed they planned to disrupt a speech by his wife, who aspired to succeed him as mayor, and ordered police to detain the students after they hijacked four buses to provide transportation to a coming protest.

Three students were shot dead in the confrontation and later three bystanders were killed in a separate attack.

Police then picked up the other students and took them to the nearby town of Cocula, Murillo Karam said. □

43 college students missing ended Tuesday in a rough-and-tumble neighborhood of Mexico City where they were hiding.

Mexico's most-wanted couple, Jose Luis Abarca and his wife, Maria de los Angeles Pineda, were arrested in a pre-dawn raid in Iztapalapa, a working-class neighborhood of the capital, Federal Police officials confirmed on Twitter. It was a far fall from their reign of wealth and power as the first couple of Iguala, a town in southern Guerrero state where the students from a teachers' college went missing Sept. 26, allegedly at the hands of police and a drug cartel.

ress in the case, has ignited protests across the country and broadsided President Enrique Pena Nieto's efforts to paint violence in Mexico as a thing of the past.

"News like this just makes you angrier," said Mario Cesar Gonzalez, whose son, Cesar Manuel Gonzalez, is among the missing students. "I wish they would put the same intelligence services and effort into finding the students. The ineptitude is staggering."

Authorities have uncovered mass graves and the remains of 38 people, but none has been identified as the missing students. Besides Tuesday's arrests, at least 56 other people have the father of one of the missing students, told Milenio television. "It was the government who took our kids."

No shots were fired in Tuesday's raid on three houses, including the one in which the couple was hiding, according to a federal official who spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the media.

One of the houses was a run-down stucco structure with cracked and stained walls and men's jeans hanging out to dry.

Before they fled, the couple ran Iguala like a fiefdom in cooperation with the local drug cartel, Guerreros

Brazil prosecutor challenges 'More Doctors' program

Associated Press

SAO PAULO (AP) — A federal prosecutors' office has alleged irregularities in the way Brazil pays Cuban doctors participating in a program set up to provide health care in remote areas, and is urging the country to pay the physicians directly rather than through their government.

In a statement issued late Monday, prosecutor Luciana Loureiro Oliveira blasted as "frankly illegal" an agreement among the Cuban and Brazilian governments and the World Health Organization. Under the setup, the program's Cuban doctors are paid about a fourth of what Brazil gives the Cuban government through the World Health Organization for their services.

While Brazil pays about $4,000 per month for each of the around 11,000 Cuban doctors in the program, Oliveira said it found a contract in which at least one of those doctors was getting only $1,000 a month.

The statement urged Brazil to pay the Cubans directly, instead of going through the WHO and the Cuban government, arguing the payment is an unfair labor practice.

The Brazilian government on Tuesday denied the allegations of irregularities, insisting the program "follows all the rules."

"The Health Ministry restates the importance of the program, which has brought medical attention to nearly 50 million Brazilians," the government said in a statement. Among a raft of measures implemented after nationwide anti-government protests last year, the "More Doctors" program aims to recruit foreigners to help improve health care access in remote, rural areas where Brazilian doctors don't want to work. □

At the Ritz Carlton Aruba; The Aruba Culinary Association enjoys first VIP networking event

PALM BEACH - A recent gathering of chefs, food & beverage professionals and purveyors re-launched the Aruba Culinary Association dormant for the past few years. The first open meeting for potential members took place on October 27th at the Renaissance Convention Center where the association formulated its mission and vision. The second open meeting, a VIP networking event, unfolded at the Ritz Carlton Resort ballroom on November 3rd, elegantly catered by Les Crustaces restaurant, publicly revealing the personalities behind the association, and their plans for the future.

Eric Sywak of Frasa International Trading introduced Urvin Croes, chef proprietor of White Modern Cuisine and Stephen Toevs, Executive Chef Ritz Carlton who welcomed the guests, reiterating their commitment to culinary excellence and their pledge to enhance Aruba's dining experience, and further the personal development of culinary students and professional chefs.

As stated in a letter circulated among general managers and food & beverage directors the association strives at reaching internationally recognized fame, allowing Aruba to have a wider global reach through a burgeoning culinary renaissance, spreading the island's reputation as a Mecca of culinary delights through social media and showing the general public and all prospective members, that there is a genuine opportunity in pursuing a culinary career in Aruba.

The association also made it its goal to offer industry education through various training sessions, newsletters, networking events, contests, membership meetings, and seminars, offering members exposure to allied industry colleagues and senior accredited chefs that an entry level person may not have been able to achieve without club assistance.

The Aruba Culinary Association is determined to help its members by creating a professional development plan that offers wider opportunities for employment, skill development, peer interaction, and knowledge of the Culinary and Hospitality industry, thus becoming a resource for local academia and industry professionals to develop ideas, trends, and procedures that keep ACA members at the forefront of the industry. Last but not least, enhance individual efforts of operators to make sanitation safety standards the #1 underlying factor in all aspects of culinary life.

Recruitment campaign VanEps Kunneman VanDoorne results in three new lawyers

ORANJESTAD - The recruitment campaign launched by law firm VanEps Kunneman VanDoorne earlier this year has resulted in three new lawyers for the firm. After Brian Zending and Raoul Profijt in Curacao, the third and last lawyer also starts at the Bonaire office with the employment of Tessa Breugom. VanEps Kunneman VanDoorne mainly focused the campaign "Advocaat in de Cariben" (Lawyer in the Caribbean) in the Netherlands to convince young Caribbean talent to choose for a legal career on the islands. With the theme "selfie", the firm showed what the legal profession encompasses here, and challenged starters and young professionals to think about where their heart lies. The firm constantly looks for new talent and is happy with the three new associates, who each have the required connection with the Caribbean.

Tessa joins the firm as a junior associate on 1 November 2014. As a result, the team in Bonaire will consist of six lawyers as of that date. A total of 20 lawyers work in Curacao, which includes reinforcements Brian and Raoul. A total of some 35 lawyers work at the four branch offices of the firm. Last week, Tuesday 21 October, Brian was sworn in before the Curacao Court. He chose VanEps Kunneman VanDoorne because of the ties the firm has with Surinam, where it also provides its services to clients. As the son of a Surinam father, he is eager to assist in reinforcing these ties. In addition, he has a particular interest in Intellectual Property law, and VanEps Kunneman VanDoorne has a flourishing practice in this field. Brian considered the ceremony to be more special than expected in advance. He studied law because of his ambition to work as an attorney, which is why it was a special moment for him when he took the oath to this effect. "I wanted to enter the legal profession because it appealed to me that you can influence real-life situations with your knowledge of the law.

Being sworn in, this ambition has become a reality and I can officially practice the profession.

That is not a formality and I thoroughly realized that during the session," Brian said. Raoul and Tessa will be sworn in later.

VanEps Kunneman VanDoorne is a law firm with 35 lawyers assisting joint clients from offices in Aruba, Bonaire, Curacao, Sint Maarten and the Dutch Caribbean Desk in Amsterdam.

Through the 'Flying Lawyers' concept our office also serves Saba, St. Eustatius and Suriname. It provides legal services to businesses and governments, both in litigation and transactions, and is the Dutch Caribbean region leader in legal services. VanEps Kunneman VanDoorne is involved in virtually all local, intra - island and international issues within the Dutch Caribbean, and has been placed in the highest category of several independent legal directories for years. The lawyers are organized in specialist practice groups and multidisciplinary sector teams.

Brian Zending, in front, after being sworn in. The session was attended by a considerable delegation of VanEps Kunneman VanDoorne, including Raoul Profijt (top right) who will be sworn in himself at a later date.

Joseph and Beverly Honored at the Tropicana Resort

ORANJESTAD - Recently the Aruba Tourism Authority had the great pleasure of honoring a very nice couple as Ambassadors of Goodwill of Aruba at the Tropicana Resort. The symbolic honorary title is presented in the name of the Minister of Tourism as a token of appreciation to guests who visit Aruba for 20-or-more consecutive years. The honorees were Mr. Joseph Brandon and Mrs. Beverly White from Yeadon, Pennsylvania. Joseph and Beverly are loyal members of the Tropicana Resort and they love Aruba very much because of the friendly people, the climate, beaches, restaurants, safety and being on Aruba and staying at the Tropicana is like being home for them and the wonderful staff of the resort is like family to them.

The certificates were presented by Mr. Ernest Giel representing the Aruba Tourism Authority together with Ms. Laura Vides representing the Tropicana Resort.

Colts Blessed by All Kinds of Luck; One Named Andrew

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. - Why was Reggie Wayne crying during the national anthem before his Indianapolis Colts turned MetLife Stadium into a fourth-quarter ghost town of gray empty seats Monday night in a not-as-close-as-it-sounds, 40-24 demolition of the New York Giants?

"The life expectancy is 3 1/2 years, and it's been 14 years for me," he said, referring to his NFL career. "I'm just blessed to be out there. An old wise guy told me you shouldn't hold back your tears."

A younger wise guy later said of Wayne's 40-yard catch and sprint for a third-quarter touchdown, "The old man's still got some legs left in him."

That, at least, was Andrew Luck, momentarily and atypically cracking wise on the 35-year-old Wayne, whose career was blessed by a decadelong partnership with Peyton Manning, endured a year of 2-14 misery when Manning was injured, and resumed consecration when Luck just happened to be on the draft board.

Fate has smiled on the Colts as it has few other franchises in such a condensed period.

"I go to work every day just happy to have Andrew as a teammate, just as I was to have Peyton as a teammate," Wayne said. He said he was blessed again, twice actually, so we better understand why it was enough to drive a man to tears.

He is blessed. The franchise is blessed, including the combustible Jim Irsay - at least as an NFL owner, if not as a troubled man with the ability to leave headline making to his players. They are all blessed to have lucked into Luck in what was as opportune a superstar transition game as possible in the timing-is-everything industry of professional sports.

Yes, the Colts did make the prudent call in the 2012 draft, choosing Luck over the chronically limping Robert Griffin III, who went second to Washington, when it was not as obvious a decision as it would be now. But consider what their draft options would have been had Manning's neck injury occurred one year later, when E.J. Manuel was the only quarterback taken in the first round (No. 16 by Buffalo) and the next one was Geno Smith by the New York Jets in the second round (No. 39 overall, more on that momentarily).

Real Madrid, Dortmund Advance in Champions League

Real Madrid, Dortmund advance in Champions League

GENEVA (AP) — Real Madrid beat an under-strength Liverpool 1-0 to advance in the Champions League on Tuesday although Cristiano Ronaldo failed to equal the competition scoring record.

Liverpool goalkeeper Simon Mignolet was beaten by Karim Benzema in the 27th minute but repeatedly stopped Ronaldo scoring the goal he needs to match Madrid great Raul Gonzalez's 71 career goals in Europe's top club competition. It also ended Ronaldo's 12-game scoring streak in all competitions.

"I don't think he got frustrated (by not scoring)," Madrid coach Carlo Ancelotti said about Ronaldo. "I used to be frustrated when I didn't score, Ronaldo keeps on scoring and I think he was just happy that we won the match."

Defending champion Madrid also earned its round-of-16 place with two rounds to spare after a fourth straight win in Group B. Basel is second after routing Ludogorets Razgrad 4-0.

Borussia Dortmund also kept its 100 percent record to secure advancement by beating Galatasaray 4-1. The Germans seemed certain to be joined by Group D rival Arsenal when the London club was up 3-0 against Anderlecht with 30 minutes to play.

However, Arsenal again showed the fragility that has marked the later years of coach Arsene Wenger's lengthy reign and let the visiting Belgian champion level at 3-3 in the 90th.

Juventus earned a thrilling 3-2 win against Olympiakos, fighting back to score twice in a minute midway through the second half, to stay in contention in Group A. Atletico Madrid won 2-0 at Malmo and still leads the group.

Group C leader Bayer Leverkusen won 2-1 at Zenit St. Petersburg, and Benfica avoided potential elimination by beating Monaco 1-0.

After Ronaldo set a single-season scoring record of 17 goals in Madrid's march to its 10th European title last May, the career mark seemed likely to fall as well for the 29-year-old Portuguese.

Especially after Liverpool coach Brendan Rodgers chose a surprising starting lineup, resting Steven Gerrard, Mario Balotelli, Raheem Sterling and several others ahead of a weekend Premier League match against Chelsea.

Mignolet denied Ronaldo for the first time with a diving stop in the 6th and stopped two later free kicks among the Madrid star's 10 attempts on goal, five of which were on target.

Benzema needed just one shot on target, connecting from close range with Marcelo's cross.

Ronaldo's great rival Lionel Messi, who has 69 career Champions League goals, takes his aim at Raul's record when Barcelona plays at Ajax on Wednesday.

Basel tripled its goal tally in this season's competition, getting goals from 17-year-old Cameroon-born Breel Embolo, Paraguay forward Derlis Gonzalez, Albania midfielder Shkelzen Gashi and Czech Republic defender Marek Suchy against Ludogorets.

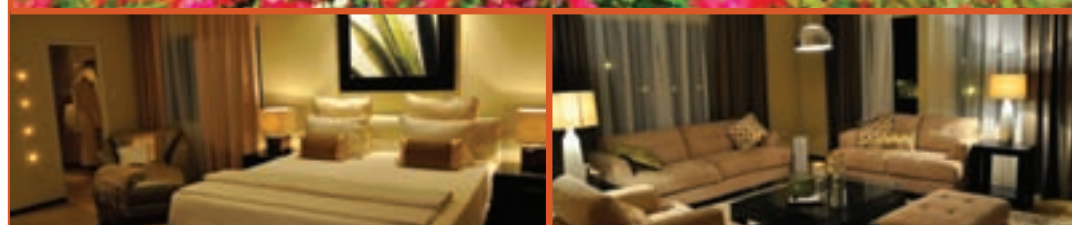

Basel has six points, three clear of Liverpool and Ludogorets. Dortmund has won only two matches in the Bundesliga all season but made it four straight in the Champions League.

Germany midfielder Marco Reus, Greece defender Sokratis Papastathopoulos and Italy forward Ciro Immobile all scored for the 2013 runner-up.

Galatasaray faces further sanctions from UEFA after fans again set off firecrackers, smoke bombs and flares, briefly interrupting the match twice.

Arsenal was cruising after an hour thanks to Mikel Arteta's penalty, a stunning volley by Alexis Sanchez and Alex Oxlade-Chamberlain's darting run and shot.

But Anderlecht struck back when Anthony Vanden Borre scored twice, including a penalty, and Aleksandar Mitrovic headed in the equalizer in the 90th.

Andrew Luck

Tim Tebow might have gotten another shot in Denver, Indianapolis would likely still be Peyton's place and Monday night could have been another one of those brotherly Manning matchups with Eli and the fading Giants.

We admire and extol the smart pro sports organizations but often underplay or ignore the element of chance in much of their success. The San Antonio Spurs have certainly earned widespread respect as a model NBA franchise, but what if David Robinson had not missed all but six games of a 20-62 1996-97 season and the Spurs had not stumbled upon the first pick and Tim Duncan in the ensuing draft?

Who was the first choice the next season? The immortal Michael Olowokandi, going to Donald Sterling's Los Angeles Clippers, averaging 8.3 points and 6.8 rebounds over a nine-year career.

Shouldn't the Spurs' path to five titles be the wishful thinking of John Idzik, the Jets' beleaguered general manager, or his possible successor after this disastrous season? The last thing the 1-8 Jets need is to rally around their lame duck coach, Rex Ryan, as they did last year. A run for respectability would diminish the odds of landing Oregon's Marcus Mariota or Florida State's Jameis Winston, underclassmen projected, if available, to go in the top five picks.

That's how arbitrary this all can be, and that is why Luck and luck are as much a tandem in the Colts' continued good fortune as any of the nine receivers with whom he shared 25 completions for 354 yards and four touchdowns against an injury riddled Giants' secondary that - among other problems - is wasting another year of Eli Manning's prime. It was the seventh straight game has not missed a game, has the league's most passing yards and touchdown throws this season and has repeatedly shown the ability to make big plays late, from behind.

lisberger and the Pittsburgh Steelers last week.

"We ask a lot of him," Matt Hasselbeck, the Colts' reserve quarterback, said of Luck. "He's obviously a young player but playing ally parallel to the ground. Spared an interception or a grounding penalty, the touchdown pass to Wayne came two plays later.

Luck's timing often is that good, and was especially after tight end Coby Fleener's apparent fumble after a sideline catch in front of Giants coach Tom Coughlin early in the second quarter. Before Coughlin could get his replay flag thrown, Luck was having the ball snapped and hitting Fleener on a 32-yard gallop to the end zone on the other side of the field.

He seems disinclined to publicly act impressed with himself, later confessing: "I don't think I played very well. There were some plays that I messed up."

He finished his postgame interview with: "I appreciate it, y'all. Safe travels." He apologized - "excuse me, sorry" - when he bumped into a reporter in the locker room.

As bearded attractions go, Luck does not quite measure up to, say, basketball's James Harden, nor does the hirsute look quite go with the Stanford-bred demeanor as the humble Manning heir. He is almost a little dull.

But with a helmet strapped on, stepping back in the pocket with the ball, who really cares?

(Ben Solomon/The New York Times)

Luck had thrown for more than 300 yards and, according to the Elias Sports Bureau, the fifth straight time he had surpassed 350 on the road.

Far from Griffin, in two seasons and nine games Luck

He hasn't won a Super Bowl, as Seattle's Russell Wilson has. He is 25. Time is on his side, though the Colts' defense raised a few doubts while surrendering 522 yards and six touchdown passes to Ben Roethlike a mature guy."

But not always.

"He gave us all a heart attack with his underhand throw," Hasselbeck said, referring to a third-quarter flip of a throwaway under pressure while virtu-

Vikings' Peterson avoids jail in plea agreement

JUAN A. LOZANO
Associated Press

CONROE, Texas (AP) — Minnesota Vikings star Adrian Peterson avoided jail Tuesday by reaching a deal with Texas prosecutors to resolve a child abuse case that revived a national debate about corporal punishment.

Peterson was sentenced to a form of probation after pleading no contest to a misdemeanor charge of reckless assault for using a stick to discipline his 4-year-old son. It was not immediately clear how the plea deal would affect his playing status or whether he might be subject to a new NFL policy that calls for a six-game suspension without pay for a first domestic violence offense.

The All-Pro running back was indicted in September on a felony charge of injury to a child after the incident earlier this year in suburban Houston. He has been on paid leave under a special exemption from NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell.

"I stand here and I take full responsibility for my actions. I love my son more than anyone of you could even imagine and I'm anxious to continue my relationship with my child," Peterson said. "I'm just glad this is over. I can put this behind me, and me and my family can continue to move forward." He was not allowed to be near his son while the case was pending, but now can resume having contact with the boy.

NFL spokesman Brian McCarthy said the league "cannot provide a timetable" for Peterson's return to the game. "We will review the matter, including the court record, and then make a determination on his status," McCarthy said.

Devon Still's daughter attending Bengals game

JOE KAY

AP Sports Writer

CINCINNATI (AP) — Devon Still figures it will be the most emotional game he'll ever play.

For the past five months, the Bengals defensive tackle has been immersed in helping his 4-year-old daughter Leah get through surgery and chemotherapy to fight a cancerous growth found in her abdomen.

She's feeling good enough to leave a hospital back home in Philadelphia and fly to Cincinnati for a game on Thursday night against the Cleveland Browns at Paul Brown Stadium, where she'll get to watch her father play for the first time.

"It will probably be the most special game I'm ever going to play because I know my daughter is going to be here to watch me play," the third-year player from Penn State said.

"All the money that's been raised for the cancer research is because of her strength and because she's fighting this disease. So it's definitely going to be an emotional game for me."

The Bengals (5-2-1) helped Still and his daughter by excusing him from offseason activities so he could spend time with her in Philadelphia. They kept him on the practice squad to start the season even though he was hurt so that he'd keep his medical coverage.

And the team helped raise money for pediatric cancer treatment and research by donating money from the sale of his No. 75 jersey to Children's Hospital in Cincinnati. The team will present a check for more than $1 million on the field after the first quarter against the Browns (5-3). Leah Still will be part of the presentation. She'll watch the rest of the game from one of the stadium boxes. "It's going to be added motivation just knowing my daughter is watching me," Still said. "I want her to be able to hear how the crowd cheers that loud whenever I make a tackle, so I'm going to go out there and do whatever I can to put a smile on her face." It's been an emotional week for Still, who befriended a college basketball player dying from a cancerous brain tumor. Freshman Lauren Hill scored four points in her first game for Mount St. Joseph on Sunday. Still wore Hill's name on his eye black patches on Sunday during a 33-23 win over Jacksonville. He usually wears his daughter's name, but got her permission to change for the one game.

"She told me to go ahead and do it," Still said. "When I got home after the game, she asked me: How did the girl who played basketball do? So she knows what's going on, she knows they're both fighting the same type of disease, and I'm pretty sure she's rooting for her also."

The Bengals showed video of Hill's first basket during the second half on Sunday, bringing tears to the eyes of several players who have either met her or accepted her layup challenge to raise money for cancer research.

"I dropped to a knee because I was just in tears for a second there," said left tackle Andrew Whitworth, who wore Hill's No. 22 on his gloves. □

NASCAR penalizes 6 Hendrick crew members for fight

Jeff Gordon is in the middle of a fight after the NASCAR Sprint Cup Series auto race at Texas Motor Speedway in Fort Worth, Texas, Sunday, Nov. 2, 2014. The crews of Gordon and Brad Keselowski fought after the race.

(AP Photo/Matthew Bishop)

CHARLOTTE, North Carolina (AP) — Brad Keselowski and Jeff Gordon avoided any penalty from NASCAR on Tuesday for their post-race fight at Texas, but two crew chiefs and four crew members from Hendrick Motorsports were punished for their roles in the brawl. NASCAR suspended three Hendrick crew members for six races for being "involved in a post-race physical altercation" and fined them each $25,000. A fourth Hendrick crew member was fined $10,000 and suspended for three races for the same offense. Gordon crew chief Alan Gustafson and Kasey Kahne crew chief Kenny Francis were each fined $50,000 and placed on probation for six races because "the crew chief assumes responsibility for the actions of his team members." NASCAR senior vice president of competition Robin Pemberton said the post-race actions were "unacceptable" following a review of content of the incident. NASCAR "identified several crew members who crossed the line with their actions, specifically punching others." "A NASCAR championship is at stake, but we can't allow behavior that crosses the line to go unchecked, particularly when it puts others in harm's way," Pemberton said. Suspended for six races and fined $25,000 were: Jeremy Fuller, the Kahne crew member who came from behind the scrum and threw several haymakers toward Keselowski, as well as Gordon crew members Dwayne Doucette and Jason Ingle. Dean Mazingo, another Gordon crew member, was fined $10,000 and suspended three races. Hendrick Motorsports said it would not appeal, and the punished team members would not face further sanctions from the organization. Hendrick team owner Rick Hendrick said in a statement the new Chase for the Sprint Cup championship format has brought "an unprecedented level of intensity every single week." "Emotions run high when you're racing for a championship, and that's exciting for our fans and everyone involved with the sport. But there's a line the competitors need to be cognizant of, and we understand that," he said. He also defended Gordon, the four-time champion who confronted Keselowski after contact between the two on the track. Gordon had been racing for a win that would have moved him into the Nov. 16 championship finale when a caution bunched the field for a restart in overtime. Keselowski tried to wedge his car through a gap between Gordon and Jimmie Johnson, but made contact with Gordon that caused Gordon to spin when his tire went flat. He wound up 29th and went from first to fourth in the standings. Keselowski, the 2012 champion who has a series-best six wins this season, is seventh in the standings heading into Sunday's race at Phoenix. Only the top four drivers will compete for the title in the season finale. "Jeff was rightfully fired up Sunday night, and it just reiterated to me how passionate he is and how much he wants to win," Hendrick said. "The No. 24 team is a group that works together and is loyal to one another. They have our full support as we go into these final two races."

Pressing Down

By: Dr Carlos Viana

In the late fifties attending the Miami Country Day School or Boys in Miami Shores I woke up one morning in my dormitory with a fever and the classical symptoms of measles the three Cs—cough, coryza (runny nose) and conjunctivitis (red eyes). Of course those were the days, before the MMS vaccine when children were still allowed to get measles. I duly reported to the infirmary to sweat out my fever that would last at least three days.

Five days later, I was still in the infirmary. My bout with the virus had been uncomplicated, yet the physician who came in every afternoon hearing I was still sleeping most of the day, would not order my discharge from the school infirmary. The doctor made sure I had not had diarrhea checked me carefully with his stethoscope for pneumonia. He knew complications are usually more severe amongst adults who catch the virus and that the fatality rate from measles in children or for otherwise healthy people in developed countries is low. Why was I still lethargic?

Asking some questions about my home back in Aruba, I heard the good doctor, on his way out of the infirmary arguing with the school nurse. Several minutes later with much complaining the nurse brought me a cup of coffee laden with milk and sugar. Even though she had been told that coffee and milk was usual breakfast beverage for Hispanic children; this matron was devoutly against giving coffee to children. Astutely aware of cultural differences among Hispanics, even before the Cuban exodus to Miami, the school doctor had chosen correctly a food that would pull me out of my funk. Within an hour I was wide awake a clamoring to be able to join my school mates.

What the insightful school doctor had realized is that I was clinically depressed. Our word depression comes from the Latin word "deprimere" which means to "press down". Perhaps this comes from the realization that people can feel that life is pressing them down. Many people identify the feeling of being depressed as "being blue", "feeling sad for no reason", or "having no motivation to do anything". Indeed, many symptoms of depression include feeling sad or blue, anxiety or irritability, or feelings of worthlessness or excessive guilt. When a person has thoughts of death or suicide they usually can figure out that something is not right with them.

However, in our grass-roots clinic I diagnose patients as suffering from a stagnation of Liver chi. This indicates that the energy within the body is not flowing smoothly and results in the symptoms of depression even when patients themselves do not recognize this. As a result of Liver Chi Stagnation, the Heart, Spleen a/or Kidney systems may also be effected. Symptoms may include significant weight loss or weight gain, explained by Tradition Chinese Medical physicians as weaknesses in the Spleen, short-term, it may lead to problems with fatigue and digestion Long-term problems related to mucus, which could affect the mind in ways such as muddling the thinking. Longer term weaknesses in the Spleen may also begin to effect the quality of blood in the body which can strongly influence the heart system causing symptoms such as insomnia a/or restlessness. So, insomnia or excessive sleeping are additional symptoms of depression. Fatigue or loss of energy can reflect an imbalance in the Kidney energy. If left untreated, the Kidneys inability to nourish Liver energy produces a definite loss of interest or pleasure in usual activities. Women who have lost their interest and pleasure in sex usually excuse their position as being "too tired". The Kidneys, being strongly related to the foundations of Yin and Yang, the combined forms of life energy in your body, are also likely to play a role in the ability to climax and vaginal lubrication. Some of the common lifestyle habits which may contribute to this are: lack of exercise, poor dietary habits - especially fried foods and foods not meant for our metabolic type, alcohol and other drugs, including some prescription medications and repressed or overly expressed emotions, especially anger or grief. People who realize they are in a funk are better prepared to help themselves. Clinical depression, where physical symptoms of depression are present can be more serious than normal depressed feelings because it often leads to constant negative thinking and often substance abuse.

Regardless of the cause, regular medicine treats both acknowledged and clinical depression with antidepressant medication which, unfortunately, are risky. In 2005, the Food and Drug Administration issued a warning of possible increased suicide risk in adults taking antidepressants and an increased suicide risk in children. With such overwhelming evidence against the prescription of the newer antidepressants, why would physicians prescribe such drugs or patients take them? There are other ways to treat depression, including acupuncture treatments, counseling and natural herbal treatments. An important caution is that no food based supplement that is effective in treating depression should be taken together with antidepressant medication, since they could compound the negative side effects. This is especially relevant with St. John's wort. In our clinic we use a combination of diet and acupuncture to rebalance the energy of your body and to support you as you transition off antidepressant medication. Once the metabolites or chemical traces of antidepressant medication are out of your body we recommend SAME, s-adenosylmethionine, and 5-HTP, 5-Hydroxytryptophan. SAME is a substance that occurs naturally in the body and that can be taken as a supplement. 5-HTP is a naturally-occurring amino acid. Studies have demonstrated that neither of these substances have the side effects of antidepressant medication and both are effective as natural antidepressants, appetite suppressants, and sleep aids. Get The Point! Often, individuals who live in modern society become stressed beyond the natural bounds of a healthy physiology. Regardless of the origin of the stress, or if we consciously recognize that we are depressed the effects may very well be the same. Aggressive antidepressant medication advertisement promises to get you out of your funk by taking their little pill. However, the small print paints a more dangerous picture. For a safer alternative for your symptoms, call for an appointment.

Burger King: chicken fries helped on American sales

CANDICE CHOI
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Burger King said bringing back its "Chicken Fries" helped sales jump in the U.S. and Canada by the biggest amount in two years. The Miami-based chain said Tuesday that global sales rose 2.4 percent at established locations during the third quarter, including a 3.6 percent increase in the U.S. and Canada. McDonald's previously reported a 3.3 percent decline in the U.S. for the same time, citing heightened competition as a factor.

Alex Macedo, Burger King's president of North American operation, said improving the speed of service at restaurants and focusing on fewer, "more impactful" new menu items is paying off.

Burger King had announced in August it would bring back Chicken Fries for a limited time after "ongoing guest outcries reached a point where they could no longer be ignored."

The dish — which consists of deep-fried pieces of chicken in the shape of french fries — had been introduced in 2005 and taken off the menu in 2012. The return of the Chicken Fries is among the many marketing pushes Burger King has made since investment firm 3G Capital took the chain public again in 2012. Some efforts have flopped; the chain recently said this summer that most its franchisees would take its lower-calories "Satisfries" off the menu after less than a year.

To boost its profits, Burger King has also refranchised company-owned restaurants in the U.S. and is striking deals with local operators to open more stores around the world. This month, CEO Daniel Schwartz said it plans to open its first restaurant in India, featuring a primarily vegetarian menu.

Burger King currently has nearly 14,000 locations globally.

The company also said this summer that it would acquire Tim Hortons for $11 billion and move its headquarters to Canada, where the chain known for its coffee and doughnuts is based. The companies said Tim Horton would take advantage of Burger King's expertise in striking international franchise deals to expand its global presence.

After factoring one-time charges primarily related to its purchase of Tim Hortons, Burger King Worldwide Inc. said it lost $23.5 million, or 7 cents per share. Adjusted earnings were 27 cents per share, in line with Wall Street expectations.

Total revenue rose to $278.9 million, short of the $281.8 million Wall Street expected.

Shares of Burger King fell 4 percent to $31. □

Wall Street retreats on oil slump

STEVE ROTHWELL
AP Markets Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The ongoing slump in oil prices weighed on stocks again on Tuesday, pushing energy companies to another day of big losses. Disappointing earnings outlooks from a range of companies, including Priceline and Michael Kors also weighed on the market.

Oil has fallen sharply in recent weeks as global supplies rise while demand for fuel trails expectations. The latest decline was prompted by reports that Saudi Arabia is cutting the price of oil that it supplies to the U.S. as it attempts to maintain its market share as U.S. production booms.

average bucked the trend, edging up 17.60 points, or 0.1 percent, to 17,383.84. While energy stocks are suffering, many analysts and investors predict that the U.S. economy will benefit in the long run from lower energy prices.

Lower gas prices will put more money in consumers' pockets, giving them more spending power.

Airline stocks were among the winners Tuesday as energy prices fell. Fuel is their single largest operating cost and lower prices should mean higher profits if demand for air travel stays strong. Delta Airlines surged $1.71, or 4.2 percent, to $42.32. United Continental, Jet Blue and Southwest Air-hurt its earnings in the current quarter. The booking company reported that its earnings rose 28 percent in the third quarter, but its outlook for the current quarter fell short of analysts' projections. Investors will also be following the outcome of the midterm elections. Polling across the board gives Republicans well over a 50 percent chance of turning out at least six incumbent Senate Democrats or capturing seats left vacant by Democrat retirements, an outcome that would put the opposition in charge of both houses of Congress in the final two years of Obama's second White House term.

Some strategists say that Trader Robert Moran, foreground center, works on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, Tuesday, Nov. 4, 2014. Stocks edged lower on Tuesday, led by a drop in energy stocks as the price of oil fell to its lowest in four years following reports that Saudi Arabia has cut its prices to the U.S.

The drop in oil prices has hit energy stocks hard, driving them into negative territory for the year. It has also helped push the stock market back from the record levels that it reached last week. "It's a case of sell first, ask questions later, for anything oil-related," said Quincy Krosby, a market strategist at Prudential Financial.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index fell 5.71 points, or 0.3 percent, to 2,012.10. The Nasdaq composite dropped 15.27 points, or 0.3 percent, to 4,623.64. The Dow Jones industrial lines also logged big gains. Investors were also keeping an eye on third quarter earnings reports.

Michael Kors fell the most in the S&P 500 index.

The maker of luxury handbags, shoes and other accessories gave an outlook for the fourth quarter that disappointed investors. The stock fell $6.57, or 8.4 percent, to $71.42.

Priceline also slumped. The online travel booking company dropped $100.82, or 8.4 percent, to $1,097.70 after the company hinted that the weak economic backdrop in Europe would even if Republicans win both houses, it will likely have little impact on the direction of the stock market in coming months.

"The reality is that you're still going to have a Democratic president, and very little is going to get done in the last two years of his term," said David Lafferty, chief market strategist at Natixis Global Asset Management. "When elections really begin to matter is probably going to be in the next cycle."

The news from overseas may also have discouraged buyers. □

CVS's 3Q lifted by generics, specialty drugs

WOONSOCKET, R.I. (AP) — CVS Health Corp. reported better-than-expected third-quarter earnings Tuesday as increased use of specialty drugs helped offset missing sales of tobacco products, which the company stopped sellings, adjusted to extinguish debt and for amortization costs, were $1.15 per share.

The results exceeded Wall Street expectations, with the average estimate of analysts surveyed by Zacks Investment Research at Specialty drugs are very expensive, usually injected, drugs for complex chronic health conditions — a category that is driving overall spending on medications. CVS has started a new program called Specialty Connect that allows cus-hurt earnings by 3 cents per share. CVS said the full-year impact of missing tobacco products would reduce earnings by 7 to 8 cents per share.

CVS Health gained national attention in February after it promised to phase out sales of tobacco products from its stores. Company leaders said tobacco has no place in a health care setting, and stores phased out the products by late September.

The company narrowed its 2014 adjusted earnings guidance to between $4.47 and $4.50, from its previous forecast of $4.43 to $4.51, excluding the 27 cents-per-share loss on early extinguishment of debt.

Analysts expect, on average, earnings of $4.49 per share, according to FactSet.

For the current quarter ending in December, CVS Caremark expects its per-share earnings to range from $1.18 to $1.21. Analysts surveyed by Zacks had forecast adjusted earnings per share of $1.21.

CVS shares slipped 52 cents to $85.60 in midday trading. CVS shares have increased 20 percent since the beginning of the year, while the Standard & Poor's 500 index has risen 9 percent. The stock has risen 38 percent in the last 12 months. □

Nissan quarterly profit jumps on sales, yen perks

YURI KAGEYAMA
AP Business Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Nissan's quarterly profit jumped nearly 15 percent to a better-than-expected 124.9 billion yen ($1.1 billion) as vehicle sales improved in almost all regions.

The Japanese automaker, behind the Leaf electric car, Altima compact and Infiniti luxury brand, stuck to its profit forecast for the full fiscal year through March 2015 at 405 billion yen ($3.6 billion).

Nissan said the perk from a weak yen and stronger sales in North America will make up for falling sales in China and other nations.

The dollar was trading at about 100 yen last fiscal year, but has been rising lately, buying about 113 yen this week. A weak yen is a boon for Japan's giant exporters such as Nissan by boosting the value of their overseas earnings.

Nissan, allied with Renault SA of France, said it gained 17 billion yen ($150 million) in operating profit for the fiscal first half from a favorable foreign exchange rate.

Yokohama-based Nissan revised its annual sales forecast to 5.45 million vehicles, down from an earlier 5.65 million vehicles. The lower forecast is still above the previous fiscal year at 5.19 million vehicles.

Analysts surveyed by FactSet had expected quarterly profit at about 100 billion yen ($885 million).

Quarterly sales edged up 6 percent to 2.68 trillion yen ($23.7 billion).

Car sales in Japan have languished in recent years as younger people lost interest in driving in a nation that abounds with reliable public transportation, especially in urban areas.

Sales have especially nosedived in recent months after sales tax was raised in April. Buyers had rushed in before the hike.

But Nissan's vehicle sales for the latest quarter improved in other parts of the world including North America, Europe and Asia. □

Softbank quarterly profit up despite Sprint woes

YURI KAGEYAMA
AP Business Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Softbank's quarterly profit nearly tripled as gains from the IPO of Chinese e-commerce company Alibaba offset losses at U.S. mobile carrier Sprint.

The Japanese telecommunications and Internet-services company reported Tuesday a fiscal second quarter profit of 483.1 billion yen ($4.3 billion), up from 165.8 billion yen a year earlier. Quarterly sales surged 23 percent to 2.11 trillion yen ($18.7 billion).

Softbank, the first to sell the iPhone in Japan, has widespread global investments including Chinese e-commerce company Alibaba, which listed in New York earlier this year after a record-busting stock sale. Softbank said it gained 599 billion yen ($5 billion) from the listing.

One sore spot is Sprint, which Softbank bought a majority stake in earlier this year. It said costs from layoffs at Sprint will total 17 billion yen ($150 million). Sprint is eliminating 2,000 jobs, or about 5 percent of its staff, to cut $1.5 billion in annual spending.

Overland Park, Kansas-based Sprint, which announced a separate round of job cuts in early October, reported a $765 million loss for the quarter. But Softbank is eyeing Sprint as a long-term investment.

"We are heading toward a turnaround," said Softbank founder and chief executive Masayoshi Son. Sprint's new chief executive, Marcelo Claure, tapped from cellphone distributor and Softbank unit Brightstar, was making progress, he said.

Son said Alibaba is reporting solid growth in profits, rising from its humble beginnings when he invested in it about 14 years ago to become one of the biggest companies in the world by market capitalization.

He compared his investment approach to valuing, instead of killing, the goose that lays golden eggs, but warned that patience was needed.

"I've long said that whoever rules China will rule the world," he said. China has overtaken Japan as the world's second biggest economy and will in the future grow bigger than the American economy, Son said. But he said the place to watch next is India, where the population is young, English-speaking and boasts excellent software engineers, praising Snapdeal as India's equivalent of Alibaba. □

Warner Bros. begins layoffs as part of cost-cutting

BROOKS BARNES

© 2014 New York Times

LOS ANGELES - Warner Bros. on Tuesday began layoffs that will ultimately eliminate 1,000 jobs, or 12.5 percent of the studio's total staff, as it tries to increase profitability amid weak domestic box office sales and a challenged television business. Kevin Tsujihara, Warner's chief executive, speaking at a recent investor conference, said the studio was seeking to cut annual overhead costs by $200 million. Tsujihara announced the layoffs in a memo to employees Tuesday.

"We examined every aspect of our businesses to ensure that we are restructuring in a way that would allow us to minimize the impact," he wrote.

Layoffs at Warner, Hollywood's largest movie and television studio, come as part of a broader effort to trim costs by its corporate parent, Time Warner, after an unsuccessful takeover attempt last summer by 21st Century Fox. Time Warner's struggling cable network division, Turner Broadcasting, last month eliminated 1,475 jobs, and HBO recently trimmed about 150.

Cost-cutting at Warner has rattled the entertainment industry. Warner - home to Batman, Harry Potter, "The Big Bang Theory" and "The Ellen DeGeneres Show" - has long been Hollywood's most stable studio. Warner has ranked No. 1 at the domestic box office in five of the last 10 years. It was second in all but one of the other five years.

But the studio, despite a notable new hit in "The Lego Movie," has recently had a tough run, suffering disappointments like "Edge of Tomorrow," "The Judge" and "Blended." It currently ranks third at the domestic box office, behind 20th Century Fox and Walt Disney Studios. (Warner has high hopes for two upcoming releases, "Horrible Bosses 2" and "The Hobbit: Battle of the Five Armies.") Warner's television production business has been sturdier, although the entire TV business is struggling to adapt to ratings erosion and the shift of viewing to digital delivery services. Like other studios, Warner's home entertainment business has shrunk as consumers buy far fewer DVDs.

Tsujihara, who took over at Warner last year, emphasized in recent interviews that the studio's film and television production ranks - the creative core of the company - would escape the brunt of cost cutting. Home entertainment will be hard hit, however, and Warner's film and television marketing ranks will be thinned.

He said some divisions, including finance and technical operations, would make some cuts now, with most coming in the first quarter of next year, reflecting more complex reorganizations.

HONG KONG - Alibaba, the Chinese e-commerce behemoth, reported Tuesday a jump in profit in its first earnings announcement since its initial public offering in September.

Shrugging off a slowdown in the Chinese economy, Alibaba's profit grew 16 percent from the same period a year earlier as the company's sites benefited from the growing number of Chinese turning to the Internet to shop.

Shares in the company, China's largest e-commerce retailer by transactions, have risen about 50 percent since it raised nearly $21.8 billion in the highly anticipated initial stock sale.

Jack Ma, left, executive chairman of Alibaba Group, watches the Los Angeles Lakers play the Houston Rockets during the first half of an NBA basketball game in Los Angeles. Alibaba reported Tuesday a jump in profit in its first earnings announcement since its initial public offering in September.

net companies, the listing surpassed the offering of Facebook, the U.S. social media giant. Now with a market value of almost $250 billion, Alibaba is worth more than Facebook. Pointing to a huge jump in the number of customers using Alibaba's e-commerce sites on smartphones and to strong increases in sales and profits, the company's executive vice chairman, Joseph C. Tsai, said in a news conference after the earnings announcement that the results provided a "strong foundation for future sustained growth." The Jefferies analyst Cynthia Meng agreed, estimating that Alibaba will count half of China's 1.3 billion people as customers over the next decade, up from less than a quarter now.

Time Inc. revenue increased slightly in 3rd quarter

RAVI SOMAIYA

Time Inc., America's largest magazine company, reported Tuesday that its third-quarter revenue had increased slightly as it continued to suffer from declines in print advertising and circulation.

Time Inc., which became independent in June after being spun off from its parent, Time Warner, said advertising revenue was flat, at $428 million. But excluding corporate transactions, advertising revenue was down 5 percent. A 9 percent drop in print advertising was offset by a 5 percent increase in digital advertising, which made up $65 million of the total. Revenue increased slightly to $821 million in the third quarter, compared with $818 million the same quarter last year, while its adjusted operating income fell $8 million to $144 million. Net income was $48 million, compared with $68 million in the year-ago quarter.

Circulation revenue declined 2 percent, to $279 million, and newsstand revenue - an area hit across the industry - declined 7 percent to $98 million. Other revenue, a category which includes some of the great hopes of the publishing industry like events and conferences, increased 11 percent to $114 million.

The company's adjusted operating income was better than expected, its chief executive, Joseph A. Ripp, said in a statement, because of "strong growth of digital advertising revenues and benefits of our efficiency initiatives." But, given declines in print advertising, he said, the company remains "committed to managing the business for stable margins and cash flows."

Time Inc., with titles including Time, People and Sports Illustrated, started life as an independent company with $1.3 billion in debt, and as part of a restructuring, laid off 500 workers. Further layoffs are expected. It expects adjusted operating income of about $510 million for the year, it said, on revenue of about $3.2 billion.

"We remain confident in our plans to drive large-scale transformation as we extend our powerful brands across platforms," Ripp said, "work to develop adjacent business opportunities, and move toward a leaner and more nimble operating model."

A lower key as Iran marks US embassy takeover

NASSER KARIMI
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Thousands of Iranians chanted "Down with America" on Tuesday in rallies marking the anniversary of the 1979 takeover of U.S. Embassy in Tehran. But the annual show of America-bashing by Iran's hard-liners seemed to bring little public enthusiasm amid the push by moderate President Hassan Rouhani for a nuclear agreement with Washington.

More than 10,000 people joined the anniversary rally outside the former embassy compound in the capital. That was thousands less than the last year's rally, the first since Rouhani's election, when his hard-line rivals sought to make a resounding show of opposition to any concessions to the United States.

Rouhani has made the negotiations the centerpiece of his administration, betting that he can secure a deal that would lift international sanctions and end Iran's isolation. That has been a major hope among many Iranians, who are looking for a boost to the ailing economy. The U.S. and its allies say the accord must ensure that Iran cannot use its nuclear program to build a weapon. U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry and Iranian Foreign

American students putting the art back into STEM

HENRY FOUNTAIN

© 2014 New York Times

Engineering and art were not always completely separate disciplines. Take Leonardo da Vinci, who seamlessly combined the two.

"Five hundred years ago, you couldn't really tell the difference between artists and engineers," said James Michael Leake, director of engineering graphics at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign. But education has become balkanized and the field of engineering, in particular, more specialized, complex and math- and computer-oriented. Today's engineering majors have little room for other pursuits.

"Learning how to think like an engineer is very powerful," said Domenico Grasso, provost at the University of Delaware. "But other disciplines also have very powerful approaches to thinking."

Grasso has long been a proponent of holistic engineering, the idea that through cross-disciplinary learning students will be better able to understand, and design for, the human condition.

At Delaware, the work of putting engineering in a broader societal context involves an interdisciplinary collaboration on a senior design prototype. Among last year's projects was a device humans can safely wear for chest compression simulations during ing as patients, helped make it function more realistically.

"Engineers focus on how it works," said Jenni Buckley, learning to make even rudimentary drawings is critical to development as an engineer. "Typically, engineering students are not gineering, art and math). Art education, they argue, teaches the kind of risk-taking and creative problem-solving that can be applied to, say, health care and climate change. In one independent project, RISD architecture and design students built an 800-square-foot solar house with engineering majors from the school up the hill, Brown. The project, which culminated in a textile-draped, Flintstones-meets-Jetsons creation called Techstyle Haus, was one of two American entries in the 2014 Solar DecathlonEurope in Versailles, France.

Isby Lubin, a Brown engineering major, said RISD design students helped her understand how to effectively use the space within the structure. She learned a lot about structural design, she said, and novel uses for strong, lightweight materials. "It's been really amazing to work with RISD students because of how focused they are on design," Lubin said. "We were able to meet in the middle because we're all trained with a really strong foundation. It's just in different things."

John Maeda, who championed STEM to STEAM as president of RISD from 2008 to 2013, has degrees in electrical engineering and computer science as well as classical design. In a commentary last year for Scientific American, he wrote this about art/science synergy: "Both are dedicated to asking the big questions placed before us: 'What is true? Why does it matter? How can we move society forward?' Both search deeply, and often wanderingly, for these answers." □ an assistant professor of mechanical engineering for the program. "Artists focus on the user experience."

Few schools actually require engineering students to take art, but the University of Illinois comes close. Leake incorporates freehand sketching and computer-aided design in his engineering graphics class. Many universities have abandoned such a class altogether, or focus on computer drawing.

Leake, whose first degree is in art history, believes that comfortable with sketching," he said. "They say, 'Oh, I can't draw.'" But being able to quickly sketch to communicate an idea, he said, "is an enormously useful tool." It also helps "see" an idea. "To do engineering you've got to be able to visualize."

The Rhode Island School of Design thinks so much of the need to collaborate that it is spearheading a national initiative to incorporate art and design in STEM education - what it calls STEM to STEAM (as in science, technology, en-

Daughters inspire independent Disney princesses

SANDY COHEN

AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Disney princess no longer needs a prince to experience true love.

Sisterhood saves the day in "Frozen." Motherly love breaks an evil spell in "Maleficent." A little girl's love of her own life is a focus of Pixar's next film, "Inside Out."

Where romance was once the goal of the cinematic princess (think "Cinderella" and "Sleeping Beauty"), Disney — long a key purveyor of princess ideology — is shifting its lens toward independent female protagonists defined by broader criteria than how they relate to men. Film-makers, inspired by their daughters, hope the shift might change some real-life perspectives, too.

"All these Disney heroines, the princesses, they're a product of their time," said Linda Woolverton, who wrote "Maleficent," released on DVD Tuesday. "The princesses that were created in the 1940s and '50s, they were the best of what a woman should be then: You're the good girl. You took abuse ... and through it all, you sang and were nice."

"But we're not like that anymore. We kick ass now."

Woolverton reflects that in her work, which includes screenplays for "Beauty and the Beast" and "Alice in Wonderland." She thought of her love for her daughter when writing the twist on true-love's kiss in "Maleficent," she said.

"It's different than any kind of romantic love," she said, "and it would be more powerful in breaking a spell than any other kind of love."

Don Hahn, an executive producer of "Maleficent," said it would be "totally inappropriate" to have a modern Sleeping Beauty rescued by Prince Charming.

"We can't put a movie on the screen where the protagonist is asleep through half the movie and only wakes up when a man wakes her up and tells her, 'OK, you can start your life now,'" he said. "I don't want to tell my daughter that story."

Jennifer Lee also was thinking of her daughter when writing and directing "Frozen." She wanted to create characters they both could relate to, and felt the bond between sisters would be more accessible to a young girl than the lure of romantic love. Lee also wanted to reflect the real girls she knows, which meant leaving familiar princess tropes behind.

Though Anna initially seeks a prince, she, like Elsa, is ultimately motivated by familial love. The two lead

"Out" is set for release next summer.

Writer-director Pete Docter said his daughter inspired your prince and all that," he said. "But the idea is yeah, you can have your prince, but that's a com-characters weren't originally written as princesses, Lee said.

"We did it to add pressure to them," she said. "In Cinderella's case, becoming a princess is the happily ever after. In our case, becoming a princess put the pressure on them because they're responsible for an entire kingdom."

Meanwhile, "Cinderella" is getting a face lift from Disney, with an updated, live-action version due out in 2015. The following year, the studio is releasing the animated "Moana," centering on a female island adventurer. Pixar's "Inside the Pixar movie, which tells the story of an adolescent girl growing up from the perspective of the emotions inside her head. The tale has nothing to do with her finding romance, he said.

"That's not part of my daughter's story," he said. "This story is about becoming and getting older."

Hahn acknowledged some concern among producers about how Disney traditionalists might view these evolved princesses.

"We thought the purists, the Disney fans, what are they going to think? Because you've got to have ponent of your life."

Feminism pioneer Gloria Steinem said such independent female characters can make a difference in real-life gender perceptions.

"If we can see it, we can be it," she said. "If we don't see it, we don't know we can."

It has paid off at the box office. "Frozen" has brought in more than $1.2 billion globally, making it the fifth highest grossing movie ever, according to box-office tracker Rentrak. "Maleficent" was a hit over the summer, with $750 million in worldwide ticket sales. □

The Roots create foundation to help alma mater

JONATHAN LANDRUM

Associated Press

ATLANTA (AP) — The Roots are tapping into their resources to help raise funds for their alma mater in Philadelphia.

The Grammy-winning hip-hop band created the CAPA Foundation after learning that $1.1 million had been cut from the budget of the Philadelphia High School for Creative and Performing Arts.

Budget cuts resulted in the loss of 19 teachers and staff members since 2012. Funding for clubs and extracurricular activities has been eliminated, and the school's annual theater production was canceled. "I'm taking this as a state of emergency," said Roots drummer Ahmir "Questlove" Thompson. He and band member Tariq "Black Thought" Trotter formed the band in 1987 after meeting at CAPA, regarded as Philadelphia's premiere performing arts high school.

The Roots are the house band for NBC's "Tonight" show. Other musical artists including Boyz II Men and Jazmine Sullivan attended the high school.

"It cultivated us. It educated us," Thompson said of CAPA. "This is more than just pay it forward or celeb guilt. This is necessary. ... It keeps you out of trouble. It helps develop your personality. If you take that away, you're just a machine."

Thompson considered donating $1 million, but his manager persuaded him to use his relationship with corporate sponsors. The drummer said there are a few companies willing to help, and a "substantial" amount has been donated, with "seed money" from Thompson and Trotter.

The nonprofit organization aims to raise $500,000 annually for the first five years and then $1 million annually after that, Thompson said.

CAPA plans to provide funding for purchasing books and classroom supplies, restoring clubs and after-school activities and renovating CAPA's theater.

"We're lending our celebrity to a school where we began," Trotter said. "In essence, it's literally a back-to-the-roots situation for us." □

Rivera, Gosselin among 'Celeb Apprentice' rivals

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball's Johnny Damon, TV journalist Geraldo Rivera and mother of eight Kate Gosselin will be among the contestants on the upcoming "Celebrity Apprentice." NBC on Tuesday announced the line-up of 16 personalities who will compete for their favorite charities as the reality show returns for a new season in the boardroom with Donald Trump on Jan. 4. Others on tap include "Deadliest Catch" star Sig Hansen, NFL great Terrell Owens, actress Keshia Knight Pulliam, comedian Gilbert Gottfried, musician Kevin Jonas and Olympic gymnast Shawn Johnson.

Rounding out the rivals are actors Lorenzo Lamas and Ian Ziering, Olympic snowboarder Jamie Anderson, actress Vivica A. Fox, TV personality Leeza Gibbons, reality star Brandi Glanville and former star of "The Real Housewives of Atlanta," Kenya Moore. □

Carnegie Hall live streaming 'Yankee Diva'

VERENA DOBNIK
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — She's the "Yankee Diva" from Kansas who sang the national anthem at last week's World Series — invited after fans clamored for her voice in a social media campaign that went viral.

Joyce DiDonato's beloved hometown team, the Royals, lost to the San Francisco Giants. But she hit the musical ball out of the park with a ringing high note — before tripping in the batter's box with a laugh.

On Tuesday night, the Internet will again be the internationally famed mezzo-soprano's friend. For the first time, Carnegie Hall is live streaming a concert to a global audience of tens of thousands — starring DiDonato.

In a sort of musical World Series, it's one of four such Carnegie recitals by top artists in partnership with the website medici.tv. The Paris-based digital provider of musical events reaches its audience using apps for Internet-enabled devices, from smartphones and tablets to desktop computers. Following each live webcast, free replay will be available for 90 days.

"Our mission is to bring artists to their audience," says Herve Boissiere, medici.tv's founder and managing director. "And Carnegie Hall is the hall of fame of classical music."

For Tuesday's concert, DiDonato and pianist David Zobel chose a program titled "A Journey Through Venice" of songs and arias inspired by the Italian city, from Vivaldi and Rossini to 20th-century British composer Michael Head.

DiDonato, a Grammy Award-winning musician, uses social media to passionately — and often whimsically — promote an art that's been pushed to the sidelines in favor of mainstream pop music.

In her self-generated Twitter, Facebook and YouTube appearances, she jokingly calls herself the "Yankee Diva." □

Shy bladder group protests Rob Lowe ad

DAVID BAUDER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Shy bladder sufferers want to stop the airing of a television ad where a "painfully awkward" Rob Lowe says that he can't urinate in public. The satellite TV company DirecTV suggests its critics should be able to take a joke.

Part of a campaign to encourage people to switch from cable TV, the ad features two Lowes: a handsome one in a slick suit who claims to be a DirecTV customer, and a goofy-looking Lowe wearing a fanny pack with his hair parted in the middle. "Painfully awkward" Lowe is a cable TV customer.

The ad touts DirecTV's service, saying cable makes subscribers wait. "Fact: I can't go with other people in the room," said awkward Lowe, standing at a urinal.

The ad is in poor taste and ridicules a serious problem, said Steve Soifer, CEO of the International Paruresis Association, which estimates that some 7 percent of Americans have some form of "shy bladder syndrome."

"We don't mind if people have a little fun with it," said Soifer, a social work professor at the University of Memphis. "It's a situation that a lot of people don't understand. In this particular case, the portrayal is making it look ridiculous, that this guy is a loser for having a problem. "What if he didn't have a leg or an arm?" he said. "Are you going to make fun of them?"

Members of his group have written and called DirecTV, asking that the ad be removed. But Darris Gringeri, spokesso he didn't know Holt had introduced him. The reporter turned his back to the camera — and to the wind — to dial his phone.

"That's when the rumors hit the Web that he was perhaps writing his name in the snow," Williams explained to the newscast's 8 million viewers, many of whom likely hadn't seen the clip in the first place. "It was just Mike working to make it right." □

Williams: Seidel didn't relieve himself in snow

DAVID BAUDER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It's a story important enough for NBC's "Nightly News": Weather forecaster Mike Seidel did not relieve himself in the snow.

NBC's Brian Williams said on Monday's broadcast that Seidel "was the victim of some wild misinformation" that floated after his aborted live report on a snowstorm in North Carolina on Saturday's edition of the network's national newscast.

Anchor Lester Holt introduced Seidel, who apparently could not hear him or know that he was on camera. Seidel, who also works for The Weather Channel, had his back to the camera and was slightly hunched over, both hands near his waist. Holt quickly ended the report.

The clip spread online and generated some media reports that suggested Seidel had been caught in the act of relieving himself, even though there was no evidence of that to the naked eye.

"Social media owes our friend Mike Seidel an apology," Williams said Monday, as "Nightly News" replayed the scene.

Williams said Seidel had lost cellphone contact with NBC's control room,

The Guantánamo Tapes

JOE NOCERA
© 2014 New York Times

Jihad Ahmed Mujstafa Diyab is a Syrian man who has been a detainee at the prison in Guantánamo Bay, Cuba, since 2002. In 2009, the Guantánamo Review Task Force ruled that he was not a threat to national security and could be released. Yet here we are five years later, and Diyab is still imprisoned at Guantánamo, having never been tried, or even accused of a crime, and with no idea when - or if - he'll ever get out. Last year, to protest their continued confinement, he and many other detainees began a hunger strike. Most of the detainees have since given up their hunger strikes. Diyab, however, has never completely stopped his.

One reason many detainees abandoned their hunger strikes is because, twice a day, the government used what is called "enteral feeding" to ensure that they were getting nutrients. A more common term is force-feeding. The ordeal begins with something called "forced cell extraction," which one of Diyab's lawyers, Jon Eisenberg, described to me as "a highly orchestrated procedure."

"A five-man riot squad in complete armor pins the guy to the floor, shackles him, and carries him out," Eisenberg says. Then the detainee is strapped into a restraint chair - which the prisoners have dubbed the "torture chair." One soldier holds the detainee's head, while another feeds a tube into his nose and down to his stomach. It is very painful to endure.

Last year, I wrote several columns about force-feeding, asking whether it could be classified as torture. At the time, I didn't think there would ever be a way to test that premise in an American court. The federal judge who seemed most sympathetic to the detainees' plight, Gladys Kessler, had concluded that, based on prior rulings by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, she simply lacked the authority to rule on the conditions of their confinement.

Lo and behold, Kessler turned out to be wrong. Earlier this year, that federal appeals court ruled, 2-1, that she did have jurisdiction. There are strict medical protocols for force-feeding hospital patients or prisoners. If the military violated those protocols - especially if detainees were force-fed in an abusive, punitive manner - then she could order them to stop.

Thus began eight months of legal wrangling between Diyab's lawyers and the government that culminated in a three-day hearing that took place in October. Though no one put it like this, its purpose, at least in part, was to decide whether the military's methods for force-feeding detainees was a form of torture.

One of those who testified on Diyab's behalf, Steven Miles, a professor of medicine at the University of Minnesota, said it's not even a close call. He was first horrified to discover that the government had been lubricating the tube with olive oil instead of a water-soluble lubricant. "When you pass the tube, some of the lubricant can drop into the lungs," he said. Olive oil in the lungs can cause an inflammatory reaction called lipoid pneumonia. (The government says it stopped using olive oil as a lubricant over the summer.)

After listing a half-dozen other ways the government's force-feeding violated medical protocols, he concluded: "They turned it from a medical procedure to a penal strategy dressed up to look like a medical procedure. The procedures look nothing like medicine."

Kessler has not yet issued her ruling, but, in the meantime, another aspect of the case has taken center stage. It turns out that the government has videotapes of Diyab enduring the forced cell extraction and the force-feeding. With some prodding from Kessler, the government was forced to allow the defense to see the videotapes. On Oct. 8, the last day of the hearing, in a closed courtroom, both Diyab's lawyers and the government's lawyers played portions of the tapes, putting them into evidence. When I asked the lawyers what they saw, they told me they were not allowed to say - because the tapes are still classified.

But 16 news media outlets, including The New York Times, have petitioned the court and asked Kessler to allow the public to see the videos. In a ruling she handed down in early October, she agreed that they should be made public. But she then stayed her ruling to give the government time to decide whether to appeal it. Diyab himself has made it clear that he would like the tapes to be seen by the public. "I want Americans to see what is going on at the prison today," he said, according to Kessler's ruling, "so they will understand why we are hunger-striking and why the prison should be closed."

With any luck, the day may soon be here when we can finally decide for ourselves whether the force-feeding of Guantánamo detainees amounts to torture. □

Flying Blind in Iraq and Syria

THOMAS L. FRIEDMAN
© 2014 New York Times

The Islamic State has accompanied its brutal takeover of large swaths of Iraq and Syria with the kidnapping and beheading of journalists. Any Western journalists who would dare to venture into Islamic State territory today would be risking their lives every second. So the United States is now involved in the first prolonged war in the modern Middle East that American reporters and photographers can't cover firsthand on a daily basis, with the freedom to observe and write what they please and with the sustained presence to offer perspective on how the story is evolving. That is not good.

But it gets worse. The Times reported last week that the Islamic State had one of its British hostages act as a combat reporter in a propaganda video from the Syrian town of Kobani, "forecasting that the town is about to fall to militants despite waves of American airstrikes," and suggesting that the Islamic State was getting even more savvy in promoting its cause by adopting the techniques of a 24-hour news channel. "'Hello, I'm John Cantlie,' the hostage says in the video, dressed in black, 'and today we are in the city of Kobani on the Syrian-Turkish border. That is, in fact, Turkey right behind me.'"

And it will get even worse. Dylan Byers, Politico's media reporter, wrote on Oct. 23 that the FBI had sent a bulletin to news organizations warning that the Islamic State had identified reporters and media personalities as "legitimate targets for retribution attacks" in response to the U.S.-led airstrikes. What are we missing by not having reporters permanently present inside Islamic State territory? A lot. We can't answer for ourselves important questions: How is our bombing campaign being perceived? Is it drawing Islamic State fighters and local Iraqi Sunnis closer together or pushing them apart? How is the Islamic State governing, running schools and the justice system, and how is this perceived by Iraqis and Syrians under its rule? What motivates so many losers and lost souls to join this jihadist movement? Do we have the right message directed at them? I could go on. Retiring Deputy Secretary of State Bill Burns recently authored a piece in Foreign Policy magazine with his parting advice to U.S. diplomats. He quoted Edward R. Murrow, the CBS News giant, advising incoming diplomats that the "really critical link in the international communications chain is the last three feet, which is best bridged by personal contact - one person talking to another."

The same is true for reporters and photographers. Sure, polls, graphs and Twitter feeds are important. They are one form of data. But interviewing another human being about hopes and dreams, fears and hatreds, is also a form of data collecting and analysis - something the best diplomats, journalists and historians rely upon. You can't capture in numbers a raised eyebrow or a wry smile or the fear in a refugee's eyes or the regret in a militiaman's voice. Sometimes just listening to someone's silence speaks volumes. I often reflect on interviews I did with Egyptian women at an all-female voting station in the poorest neighborhood in Cairo in the 2012 election that brought a Muslim Brotherhood leader to the presidency. Almost all of them had voted for the Muslim Brotherhood candidate, Mohamed Morsi. But when I asked why, not a single one cited religion. Instead they said that Morsi would bring jobs, security, sidewalks, better living conditions and an end to corruption - in short, better governance. Morsi was eventually toppled for bringing none of those, not because he was impious.

Recently, Vice News used the veteran Al-Jazeera and Arabic photojournalist Medyan Dairieh to produce a compelling documentary from Syria, called "The Islamic State." But that was a one-shot deal done with "conditions in order to get in and get out with your life," Jason Mojica, the Vice News editor-in-chief, told a panel at NYU, according to The Huffington Post.

I asked Mina al-Oraibi, assistant editor of the London-based Asharq Al-Awsat, how an Arabic daily covered the Islamic State, also known as ISIS:

"We have our correspondents supported by a few local stringers who risk their lives by being in touch with us from Iraq. However, we have a blackout from ISIS-controlled areas in Syria, especially Raqqa. In Iraq, our use of phones and emails to get information leaves us worried about the safety of these reporters, and often they are working without knowing how they will eventually get paid. ... Having said that, our coverage is enriched by networks of Iraqis and Syrians reaching out to tell us their stories, in addition to relations with Iraqis, Syrians, and other Arabs who have either interacted with some ISIS militants or had relations with them when they were under other banners."

But the reality, she added, "is that much of what we know is either from ISIS militants, or anecdotal stories from observers or people with families in places controlled by ISIS."

Indeed, the Islamic State is telling us what it wants us to know through Twitter and Facebook, and keeping from us anything it doesn't want us to know. So be wary of what anyone tells you about this war - good, bad or indifferent. Without independent reporting on the ground, we're in for some surprises. If you don't go, you don't know. □

Lamb Shanks Reveal a Softer, Subtler Side

DAVID TANIS

© 2014 New York Times

Rare-grilled lamb chops or a roasted leg of lamb can be delightful and are easy to cook if you're in a hurry. But with a little planning, you'll find it's the shank of the lamb that deserves the most praise. Careful, slow simmering will coax lamb shanks to a flavorful succulence far superior to other cuts.

Long braising shows off the lovely silky, almost-sticky texture that is their trademark.

talk about Persian food, they seem to glow with excitement. Listening to them reminisce about food from their childhoods and the festive food served for holidays makes me hungry. My friend Andy Baraghani, a talented local chef, has taught me that Persian cuisine, though it uses lots of spices, is never overspiced, and the use of hot pepper is rare. Fresh, light and healthy is an accurate description. A meal always has an accompaniment of green herbs of all sorts -

Or it is embellished with the traditional crisp buttery bottom called tahdig. For the method, you can consult my recipe for Persian jeweled rice, made with dried fruits.

Sweet spiced aromas waft through my kitchen as my lamb shanks simmer in the oven. I'm nibbling pistachios and sipping cool water flavored with a few drops of rosewater. There's a basket of pomegranates, oranges and limes on the table. I'll sit here for a while, anticipating a fine dinner

1 teaspoon turmeric

Vegetable oil

1/4 teaspoon crumbled saffron

Juice of 2 limes, about 4 tablespoons

3 teaspoons rosewater, available from Middle Eastern grocery shops

1 large onion, roughly chopped

1/2 teaspoon ground dried lime, or the zest of 1 fresh lime

Zest of 1 orange, plus 1 tablespoon more for garnish

A few thyme sprigs

at room temperature at least an hour, or wrap and refrigerate overnight, then bring to room temperature.

2. Place a Dutch oven or deep, heavy pot over medium-high heat and add oil to a depth of 1/2 inch. When oil is hot, add two lamb shanks and fry until nicely browned on all sides, about 5 minutes. Remove and set aside, then brown the two remaining shanks.

3. Meanwhile, put saffron in a small bowl with lime juice, 2 teaspoons rosewater and 1/2 cup warm water. Let steep for 10 minutes. Heat oven to 350 degrees.

4. Carefully remove all but 2 tablespoons oil from Dutch oven. Add chopped onion and cook over medium heat until softened and lightly colored, 8 to 10 minutes. Season onion with salt, then add lime zest, orange zest, thyme sprigs and bay leaves. Stir in saffron mixture. Lay in the lamb shanks and add the broth. Bring to a boil, then turn off heat and cover pot.

5. Transfer pot to oven and bake for about 1 1/2 hours, covered, until meat is tender when probed and beginning to fall from the bone. Remove lamb shanks to a deep serving dish and keep warm. Strain braising juices through a fine-mesh sieve into a bowl, pressing with a wooden spoon to obtain all the liquid (discard thyme, bay leaves and onions). Skim fat, then taste and add salt if necessary. Add 1 more teaspoon rosewater, if desired. Reheat strained juices and pour over lamb shanks. Combine parsley, mint and reserved orange zest and sprinkle over top.

6. Use a large spoon to break the tender shank meat into large chunks. Serve in low, wide soup plates, giving each portion a spoonful of the juices. Accompany with steamed basmati rice, lavash flatbread or a loaf of crusty French bread.

Note: Some brands of rosewater are more strongly perfumed than others. Use sparingly at first, then add more to taste.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings. □

Persian spiced lamb shanks, coated in a mixture that includes cinnamon, nutmeg, cardamom, and rosebuds, in New York. Careful, slow simmering will coax lamb shanks — easily adaptable to recipes from many different cuisines — to a flavorful succulence far superior to other cuts.

(Fred R. Conrad/The New York Times)

Lamb shanks are versatile, too, easily adaptable to recipes from many different cuisines. Employing a heady Persian spice mixture, for instance, makes a lamb shank braise that is complex and nuanced. The flavors are balanced, with subtle hints of orange, lime, saffron, cinnamon and dried rosebuds.

I'm lucky to count some Iranian-Americans among my circle of friends and acquaintances. Every one of them is a passionate cook, and when they basil, parsley, dill, cilantro, tarragon, garden cress, mint, fenugreek sprigs and chives, along with scallions and radishes. He tells me that his father, who prefers to have his main meal of the day in the afternoon, has just tea and a platter of herbs in the evening.

Rice, a Basmati type, is also a permanent presence, whether served on the side or as part of a dish. On any given day, it may be plain buttered rice, but it is often stained yellow with a drizzle of saffron water.

PERSIAN SPICE LAMB SHANKS

Time: 2 1/2 hours

4 meaty lamb shanks (ask for the hind shanks), about 4 1/2 to 5 pounds

Salt

2 teaspoons ground cinnamon

1 teaspoon grated nutmeg

1 teaspoon ground cardamom

1 teaspoon ground rosebuds, optional

1 teaspoon ground black pepper

2 fresh bay leaves

6 cups hot chicken broth or water

2 tablespoons roughly chopped parsley, for garnish

2 tablespoons roughly chopped mint or dill, for garnish

1. Trim any excess fat from lamb shanks and season generously with salt. Mix together the cinnamon, nutmeg, cardamom, rosebuds (if using), black pepper and turmeric. Sprinkle evenly over shanks and rub into meat. Let sit
